NOT HER DAY

Sometimes it seems the whole world's out to get you and Mary Ellen Woods can be forgiven for feeling that way Friday.

Her car was hit — three times — by other cars as she drove to work.

Shortly before 8 in the morning she was stopped in a line of traffic on Carey Road when a car turned off Douglas and skidded into hers.

The other driver was apologetic. There was no damage so he drove off.

A moment later when she had advanced a little in the line-up another car swung around the corner and again slid into hers.

That driver felt badly too. There was no damage to speak of so he went on his way.

The 19-year-old clerk with a provincial government agency was feeling a bit shaken by developments so she pulled her near-new car to the curb on Douglas near Hillside, intending to walk to work.

This time a passing car skidded into her front fender causing an estimated $350 damage. It didn't stop.

"I closed my eyes and said, oh no," she recalled. All she remembers of the hit-and-run car is that it is green.

Her insurance agent has told her that the other driver needs to be found so a claim can be launched through his insurance company. While a claim can be made through her insurance, it will force the premium rate up.

City police are investigating.

Hanoi Claims U.S. Broke Bombing Pact

Times News Services

HANOI — U.S. planes have again bombed north of the 20th parallel, despite President Nixon's statement Dec. 30 that the bombing would be curtailed for the peace talks, a North Vietnamese spokesman said today.

A member of the Hanoi foreign ministry said U.S. planes bombed Dong Lai parish, Friday, about 30 miles north of Nixon's 20th parallel cut-off point and 50 miles southwest of Hanoi.

The U.S. Command, however, denied the bombing raid, but some U.S. spokesmen said aerial reconnaissance flights were continuing over the Hanoi area.

It was as a result of Nixon's decision to curtail the bombing that Le Duc Tho left Hanoi Wednesday for Paris where he is due to meet Henry Kissinger on Monday.

Meanwhile, in Washington it was reported that Vietnam war costs, including 12 days of heavy bombing in December, have risen from $1 billion to $2 billion above previous estimates.

The 12-day bombing campaign alone added about $500 million to the cost of the war.

Both the Pentagon and the White House are now concerned with finding a way to pay for these added costs.

Last July, after the North Vietnamese offensive into South Vietnam, the Defence Department raised its estimate of the full cost of the war in fiscal 1973 by $1.1 billion to a total of $7.1 billion. That estimate, however, only ran through Sept. 30. Authoritative defence officials now say operations since then — including the December bombing raids — have added from $1 billion to $2 billion in new costs.

In addition to money problem, there was discussion of information problems at the Pentagon Friday.

Defence Secretary Melvin Laird tightened the lid on details of the massive bombing raids last month, claiming that release of such information could upset the Paris peace talks.

"No information will be put out of this building at any time that would possibly jeopardize the success of those negotiations," Laird said. He said that he had ordered his chief spokesmen to "bear that in mind as they disseminate information during the next week or 10 days."

The South Vietnamese command, meanwhile, reported intensified North Vietnamese and Viet Cong attacks in South Vietnam, many of them aimed at villages and towns. At least three civilians were killed and 15 wounded in the latest attacks, it said.

Family of 16 Loses All

A family of 16, including 11 children, which was scheduled to move today lost all their belongings when an early morning fire destroyed the house they were leaving.

While all the occupants escaped from the older rented home at 3153 Gamma without injury, two city firemen were hurt fighting the blaze.

Fireman George Robertson slipped on ice and injured his shoulder. And Lieut. Cliff Robbins was struck by a falling timber.

"If he hadn't been wearing his helmet he would have been dead," assistant fire chief John Stewart said today.

One of the tenants, Johnny John, said he was awakened about midnight by his sister, Mrs. Greda Thomas. The family escaped through the back of the house as flames roared through the living room and engulfed the whole building.

Firemen, who answered the alarm at 12:06 a.m., estimated loss at about $9,000. Only the shell of the house remained.

In addition there were a married son, Norman, 19, and his 16-year-old wife, Vicki; Mrs. Thomas's sister Lorraine, 23, and her children, Anson, 6; Chris, 4, and three-month old Rosemary, a brother, Johnny John, 38, and his 11-year-old son Peter.

Jim Nelson, director of Victoria Rental Aid Service, said today the family was left with just the clothes they are wearing. They lost groceries, all bedding and furniture besides the rest of their clothes.

Donations could be taken directly to 740 Audley, he said.

Tories Slap 'Sweetheart' Tag on NDP

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Opening day ritual out of the way, opposition members of Parliament quickly resumed their customary roles of sniping at the Liberal government and at each other Friday.

The Progressive Conservatives and the New Democratic Party fired their main salvoes at the government and then exchanged a few shots between themselves.

The New Democrats, committed for the present to supporting the minority Liberals were called "sweethearts" and "bedfellows" of the government by jeering Tories.

Stanfield tried without success to get from Prime Minister Trudeau a list of bills the government will present to carry out Thursday's throne speech promises.

Outside the House he said the lack of such a list indicates the government "apparently is not very clear on its priorities."

He also sought the presentation dates of Finance Minister Turner's budget and of the tax bills left over from the last Parliament.

Trudeau said government House Leader Allan MacEachen will indicate the nature of some bills next week. Mr. Turner would announce the date of the budget soon.

The Conservative leader also tried in vain to get Turner to say whether the government will revoke a three-per-cent increase in personal income tax scheduled to start Jan. 1.

The finance minister did admit, on questioning by Lewis, that he had discussed with Revenue Minister Robert Stanbury a decision not to increase tax deductions from employee payrolls Jan. 1 until the matter is reviewed.

Stanfield told reporters Lewis was "easily satisfied" when he and the NDP agreed not to vote non-confidence in the government at present.

A Conservative motion of non-confidence will be presented next week. Stanfield said "it will deserve the support of the House" but gave no details.

A combination of PCs with the 31-man NDP group would defeat the government.

The Liberals hold only 109 seats, Social Credit 15 and there are two independents.

In one opening shot Friday, freshman member Petter Reilly (PC—Ottawa West) accused the government of holding Parliament in contempt by releasing the text of the throne speech to reporters in advance of its delivery Thursday afternoon.

Reilly, a political columnist and former broadcaster, demanded an apology and an explanation from the prime minister.

Trudeau said the policy of providing the press with copies of government documents for handling in advance has been in force for at least 20 years.

CANCER CAME IN NEW HEART

Washington Post

WASHINGTON — For the first time in the history of heart transplants, a recipient has died of a cancer apparently introduced in his body by the heart he received.

The case was disclosed by the St. Louis University medical centre Friday. An official of the American College of Surgeons called it "unique." No previous heart recipient has succumbed to cancer received from his donor, though it has happened in several cases of kidney transplants.

Vincent Dobelman, 45, was given a new heart at the St. Louis centre Feb. 8. It came from a man who died of a brain tumor but not, so far as the surgeons knew then, from a cancer.

The operation was this centre's first heart transplant. Such transplants had already proved so chancy and donors so difficult to get, that surgeons at most centres had stopped doing them for the present.

Dr. Norman Shumway at Stanford is still doing almost one a month. Shumway and many other surgeons argue that transplants are still worth trying, on a careful basis, in patients who could not live by other means.

QUINTS FAIR IN ILLINOIS

EVANSTON, Ill. (AP) Quintuplets born Friday night to a young couple were in fair condition early today in hospital here. The mother, Lynn Baer, 26, of nearby Northbrook, gave birth to three girls and two boys, the couple's first children. Dr. William Gardner, who is supervising care of the infants said Friday night the babies' lung functions were reasonably good and their breathing more rapid than normal.

Thalidomide Firm Offers $47 Million

LONDON (AP) The parents of Britain's crippled thalidomide children warily welcomed today an offer of about $47 million in compensation from the giant British drug and liquor company that marketed the tranquillizer that brought agony.

The Distillers Co. proposed Friday night to pay about $4.7 million a year for the next decade into a "charitable fund" for the deformed children.

That was exactly the amount the parents had demanded. But one niggling doubt remained: How will the money be shared out?

London art dealer David Mason, leader of the parents' pressure group who now is in the United States mobilizing support for a planned boycott there of Distillers products, said:

"It's a much more realistic offer, but I'm worried about accepting any deal that involves a charitable trust. It is not acceptable if it involves a means test."

A "means test" would involve assessing the parents' finances to determine how much should be awarded to their children.

Parents insisted when they rejected Distillers' two previous offers that their children should be given money on the basis of their deformities rather than the size of their parents' bank accounts.

However, there was hope the deal, four times more than Distillers' previous offer, would be accepted by the parents and end the years of agony.

The chief charity commissioner, Thomas Green, commented: "The deeds of a charity trust need not necessarily involve a means test. In this case, I don't anticipate any difficulties."

But as the parents considered the deal, Distillers said bluntly it was the company's "final offer". The company has always denied negligence or legal liability.

Distillers said that it would set up the trust as soon as the majority of parents accepted the offer.

The company also promised an immediate payment of about $11,750 to each family, including the parents of thalidomide victims who accepted smaller settlements in 1968 before the big thalidomide crusade got going.

'Uncertain Future' Seen in B.C.

VANCOUVER (CP) — William Hamilton, chairman of the Employers' Council of British Columbia, expressed concern in a statement prepared for release today about the province's economic future under the recently-elected New Democratic Party government and warned that proposed increases in corporation income taxes would weaken productivity and ultimately depress living standards in B.C.

"We face an uncertain future in British Columbia. For the first time in North American history, a prosperous, industrialized, resource-oriented province is firmly within the control of a socialist government," Hamilton said in a speech prepared for the annual convocation ceremony of the B.C. Institute of Chartered Accountants.

"There is a wide variety of opinion within the business community concerning what this will mean to the broad economic future of the province. Perhaps, as some like to believe, a resource-rich province such as British Columbia can afford a taste of socialism better than most places," he said.

But "every time you pile more taxes on a company, you reduce the capacity of that company to market its products, to enlarge its plant, to increase and broaden its production, to employ more people, to pay higher wages."

Business and industry are constantly being chided to accept greater social and environmental responsibilities, and are increasingly doing so, Hamilton told the 75 graduating accountants.

"But government must also recognize and acknowledge, however reluctantly, that it has financial as well as social and environmental responsibilities."

He suggested that Premier Dave Barrett commission a study of financial priorities and realities and recommended the establishment of an economic council of B.C.

"Taxes above a certain equitable level can burden and even bankrupt a whole economy, not just financially, but also in the sense that they stifle and eventually kill entrepreneurial enterprise."

Hamilton said the NDP's pre-election proposal to raise the current 10 per cent corporate income tax, collected under the federal-provincial collection agreement, "would have obvious deleterious effects on the competitiveness of our industries."

"At the moment, I doubt that our business community and the government are going to see eye-to-eye on taxation policy. While the government will be viewing it from the standpoints of idealism and 'anti-corporate bumishness,' business will be arguing from the hard school of experience and bottom line on the balance sheet.

"And both at times will be arguing without adequate facts, because until now we have had no provincial vehicle similar to the economic activity and more long-term benefits for our people, our society and our economy that if the same million is spent by a government."

"I submit that provincial taxation policy . . . can make or break the whole economic picture because, more than in almost any other province, our economy is one of harvesting and processing raw materials such as forest products, which must then be sold on the markets of the world in competition with all other areas.

"It is a fact of life that many of our mines exist, operate and generate considerable employment only because the existing tax policy has made it economic to mine low-grade ore ore which would not be economic to mine if taxes were heavier."

U.S. Impotent To Override Nixon on War

By SPENCER RICH
Washington Post
(An Analysis)

WASHINGTON — Despite mounting anti-war furor on Capitol Hill, it may be virtually impossible for congress to legislate an end to the war.

It can pressure the president, impair his prestige, signal to the world that the congress of the United States repudiates his policies.

But any legislation imposing a binding legal requirement for an immediate pullout from Vietnam faces tremendous legal and procedural obstacles.

Any binding legislation — either a cutoff of Indochina funds or a flat directive to the president to get out — must take the form of a bill, or an amendment to a bill, that must pass both chambers of congress and be signed into law by the president.

In the Senate, which has already passed fund-cutoff proposals only to see them die in the House, Republicans have the weapon of mounting a filibuster against the legislation.

Recalling that a block of GOP senators filibustered an anti-war amendment for nearly two months during the Cambodia operation three years ago, a top GOP aide said Friday, "we may talk again for as long as it takes to get out of Vietnam."

Even if it should come to a vote, there is no certainty that a really tough, unequivocal Indochina pullout amendement can pass both the senate and house. A fund cutoff contingent on North Vietnamese release of prisoners squeezed through the Senate by only a 50 to 47 vote last year; a similar house amendment was defeated last Aug. 10, 229 to 177.

Even if it should pass both chambers this year, the end-the-war proposal could be vetoed by the president. It would then take a two-thirds vote of each chamber to override the veto. But in the forseeable future, achieving a two-thirds majority is politically impossible.

Nevertheless, if this should somehow happen, the president still wouldn't be legally cornered — at least not absolutely.

Any immediate fund cutoff able to muster the votes to pass would almost surely contain some precondition on release of prisoners and the safe withdrawal of U.S. forces.

Since the release of U.S. prisoners by Hanoi is one of the key issues in the current ceasefire negotiations, "end-the-war" amendements tied to that condition would be moot as long as the negotiations are unresolved.

While trying to fulfill the prisoner-release condition, the president can also seek to obtain other concessions from the North Vietnamese and can also continue U.S. military involvement.

If the obstacles to congress succeeding in legislating an end to the war are so great, what's the point of all the effort, Democratic caucus declarations, and foreign relations committee plans to take up fund cutoff legislation?

The real objective is political impact on the president.

A majority vote in both chambers to cut off funds for the war without further guarantees to South Vietnam would be a repudiation of the president's policies.

The rebuff would be all the sharper because, with many southern Democrats still backing the president's position, the fund cutoff could be achieved only with substantial GOP defections.

It would signal that despite the president's enormous power to sway public opinion, a majority of congres had decided, after soundings at home and searchings of conscience, that a substantial majority of the public favored an immediate end of the war, come what may.

That is the kind of signal presidents usually listen to. And that is why critics of the war are pressing ahead with their fund cutoff proposals despite all the procedural obstacles.

HOUSING SOLUTION REJECTED

City council can't continue "shoving welfare families into complexes like cattle" or allowing slums to grow in Victoria, Jim Nelson, director of the Victoria Rental Aid Society, said today.

'Of the 171 welfare families I surveyed," Nelson said, "95 per cent said they wanted to live in single family dwellings."

Nelson was commenting on remarks Friday by Mayor Peter Pollen, who said one of city council's top priorities this year will be provision of adequate housing for young families.

Pollen said there is almost a complete lack of accommodation for young families is Victoria and added he is thinking "more in terms of low or medium density apartments and townhouses."

Nelson said he agreed that Pollen had spotlighted the greatest problem but disagreed with his solution.

He said poor families had a choice between living in complexes "like a bunch of cattle," or moving back to slums.

"On Oct. 25, 1949, city council passed a by-aw to stop landlords from turning their property into slums — what have they been doing about it ever since?" Nelson asked.

"I don't think council is even aware of the bylaw."

Nelson said he believed it would be possible to provide single family dwellings at not unreasonable costs.

"The only tradesmen needed to build houses are plumbers and electricians and all the workers on welfare could do the building part," he said.

"Families want their own front yard and picket fence around it to keep the kids in," Nelson said. "It would cut down on juvenile delinquency."

Pollen also said he felt homeownership by young families would add a sense of stability to the community.

He would not disclose details of the administrative changes needed to begin the city's involvement in housing matters but more specific plans are expected to be announced in his inaugural address at Monday's council meeting.

Smoking Education Week Scheduled

Mayor Peter Pollen — who admits he hasn't quite kept his New Year's resolution to quit smoking—has proclaimed "Education on Smoking Week" to begin in Victoria on Monday.

"It's a terrible habit," Pollen said today.

"But I'm going to quit for sure," he added.

In proclaiming the special week, the mayor urged "parents, voluntary and official health agencies, public, parochial and private schools, medical societies, PTAs, hospitals, businesses and industries to join forces beginning this week to intensify their efforts in the smoking education program."

Things to do about smoking, according to the proclamation are:

Report Urges Consultant For Physical Education

A report to Greater Victoria school board on improving physical education in elementary schools calls for hiring of a $16,500 per year consultant and five $9,000 per year specialists, along with general increases in P.E. budgets.

Board vice-president Walter Donald says the report will trigger discussion about whether P.E. instructors need to be certificated schoolteachers, and "hard talk" about where the money will be found.

"The gymnastics program in our schools, particularly elementary schools, is not adequate, and I'm quite sure the trustees will look very sympathetically at any proposals for upgrading it," Donald said. "But if the aim is to get the job done, do the teachers need to be certificated?"

"Most Olympic stars may teach gym but they are not certificated," Donald said.

The report was commissioned by the board and drawn up by Hillcrest school principal D. G. Henderson during a special leave.

It comes up for discussion Monday before the board's instruction-curriculum committee.

It lists eight budget priorities which will cost $107,000 for 1973. Top priority is listed as the hiring of the consultant and the specialists.

EATON AD BRINGS FINE

TORONTO (CP) — T Eaton Co. Ltd. was fined $1,000 Friday after it pleaded guilty to a charge of misleading advertising under the Combines Investigation Act.

The federal department of consumer and corporate affairs laid the charge in connection with a full-page ad in the Toronto Star May 1, when a sofa and chair were advertised as on sale for $389.95 with the regular price listed as $609.50.

Court was told that the highest the set had sold for was $489.75. Defence lawyer Robert Carter said that the reason the price was judged at $609.50 was due to a miscalculation.

Judge Crawford Guest handed down the maximum fine as a safeguard against similar advertising mistakes.

Let us show you how you can read almost as fast as you think!

Most people don't believe this. For years people have passed along an archaic method of reading . . . and thought it was the only one!

Then researchers, Evelyn Wood and others, discovered that the ability to read at "thinking speeds" was not only possible, but could be taught . . . and so DYNAMIC READING began!

DOUGLAS TIFFS 'EXAGGERATED'

OTTAWA (CP) — T. C. Douglas described Friday as "somewhat colorful and exaggerated" a report on incidents involving himself and his wife while they were in Jamaica last month.

Douglas, 68, who issued a short statement about the item by The Canadian Press, declined to specify exaggerations, but said the story was a "highly colored" version of what actually took place.

He said his main concern was for the Jamaican tourist industry and the reflection cast on it by the report.

The story quoted a spokesman for Douglas in Nanaimo, as saying the former NDP leader had a series of escapades with would-be muggers and burglars.

Outfall Bacteria Left to Nature, Gulls

The B.C. pollution control branch Friday released its findings on the effectiveness of the Macaulay Point outfall but refused to say whether pollution has been stemmed in the area.

A brief press release on the University of Victoria monitoring program gives only a summation of the findings. They are all technical in nature and draw no broad conclusions about the possible effect on human health.

In an interview, pollution control director William Venables said the outfall, a subject of some controversy in the capital region, is "generally doing what we expected."

This was based on research done on similar outfalls in Great Britain, Venables said.

He said he had to be "very careful not to draw any conclusions" about the results of the monitoring.

Venables stressed that it may be up to the public to decide whether or not the Macauley Point outfall is adequate to disperse sewage discharged from it.

For example, he said, the public may decide that it is not adequate to have gulls feeding on "small, white fat-like particles" emerging from the outfall and containing high coliform counts. Coliform count is the measure of harmful sewage bacteria.

He said he had to be "very careful not to draw any conclusions" about the results of the monitoring.

The pollution control branch has planned a public inquiry into municipal sewage disposal methods and Venables said the Macaulay Point outfall will be included in the inquiry.

Venable said that "nature itself provides treatment" and it has to be decided whether or not the Macaulay Point outfall disperses sewage to the point that nature can provide treatment adequately in this case.

The key findings of the report as listed by the pollution control branch are the following:

Cessation of sewage discharge at the old shoreline outfall at Macaulay Point resulted in a return to a normal condition there as compared with other coastline areas.

"Discharge of effluent from the new extended outfall has not resulted in any significant changes in the values of parameters routinely measured at the stations closest to the diffuser, with the exception of coliform bacteria."

The point at which most observed effluent now surfaces is about one half a mile east of the diffuser. But the coliform count was "quite low."

"Visual observations in the area around the diffuser have shown the year-round presence of small amounts of gross floatables (mainly small, white fate-like particles) identified as of sewage origin by their high coliform counts. It is this component of the effluent that is being fed on by gulls often observed in the area."

"This indicates that there is no detectable effect of effluent discharge on the local receiving waters."

"Stratification of the water column in the area around the outfall was not very strongly developed, so that the rising effluent plume would not often be constrained from reaching the surface."

Venables said one reason for releasing the information was to better inform members of the public who will want to make submissions to the public inquiry, which starts April 30 at the Newcombe Auditorium in Victoria.

Acupuncture Rules Urged By CMA Man

OTTAWA (CP) — Provincial governments and provincial medical groups should get busy and develop some basic licensing regulations to cover acupuncture, says Dr. J. D. Wallace, secretary general of the Canadian Medical Association.

In an issue of the association's journal released this week, Dr. Wallace said controls and licensing should cover both doctors and non-doctors and should be determined "before we get into serious trouble."

The official medical view always has been that if a procedure can't be proven valid by scientific tests, then it is unacceptable in medicine, he said in his regular column, in the magazine for doctors.

However, the medical profession should be "honestly and thoroughly considering the use of acupuncture techniques as a potentially useful part of our medical armamentarium."

The procedure is based on an ancient Chinese medical technique and involves placing of needles into specific points of the body. There is no scientific explanation, but the procedure does relieve pain.

SWALLOW PRIDE

"The major point now is whether or not the medical profession in Canada is broad enough in its outlook to swallow its pride and accept the fact that there may be factors in the provision of good health care, in its broadest sense, that may defy scientific proof."

The requirement for proof has sometimes resulted in public confrontations between doctors and others on a number of issues, he said, mentioning the use of vitamin E in heart patients and chiropractic practice.

However, he said these past confrontations should not deter the profession from looking into the values of acupuncture, which now is officially used by western-trained Chinese medical doctors.

The procedure should not be considered a cure-all, he said. Advice from a recent medical delegation from the Peoples Republic of China was repeated.

"They do know that its efficacy is limited to conditions in which the nervous system is involved—primarily for the control of pain and shock."

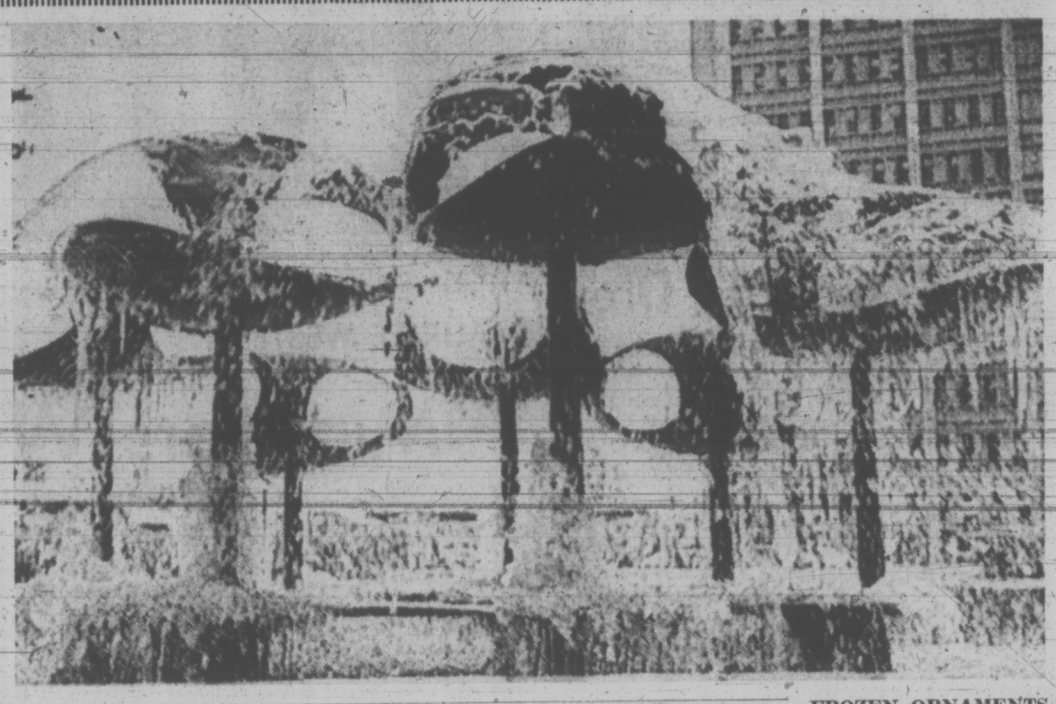
Dr. Wallace, chief administrative officer for the 23,000-member association, said acupuncture is regarded in China as an exacting art that requires many years of professional training.

"Because of the public interest in this procedure that has been aroused by the news media, there is great danger that untrained personnel will capitalize on a lucrative market and exploit it in a way that could well discredit the art of acupuncture.

"The various legislative and licensing bodies must immediately set up requirements to protect the public from charlatans who will try, without proper training, to introduce acupuncture therapy into Canada."

This included doctors who were not properly trained, he said. Chinese doctors have said that even a doctor requires "considerable additional training."

"It is obvious that a person with no basic medical training would require a much longer educational period."



Key ECM Job to 'Unknown'

PARIS (AP) — Francois-Xavier Ortoli, an economist who turned to politics, takes over today as president of the Common Market's executive commission.

Although he has held cabinet posts in the French government, Ortoli, 47, is relatively unknown even in France.

A product of the Gaullist political regime, Ortoli is described as being more of a pragmatic reformer than a Gaullist idealist. His closest associations have been more with Georges Pompidou, who was premier before he became president, rather than with Charles de Gaulle.

He was Pompidou's top administrative aide in the premier's office.

Ortoli replaces Sicco Mansholt, a Dutchman who is retiring as president of the executive commission. His salary will be $47,000 a year.

The commission runs the Common Market's daily work and is orgahized like a country's cabinet. The commission makes proposals to the member countries, and each of the nine members has the right to veto any proposal.

Ortoli became a specialist in Common Market matters in 1958 when he led a committee to speed up the liberalization of exchanges of strategic goods, such as electronics, nuclear and petroleum products, among the original six members of the European community.

The report by that committee was said to have notably accelerated the free trade process inside the Common Market.

Ortoli was then described as being divided between his loyalty to de Gaulle's nationalist policy and his conviction that Europe should unite.

He was said to have been reluctant to accept the leadership of the French interministerial committee for European affairs at a time when de Gaulle acted against any far-reaching integration in Europe and spoke against admitting Britain to the Common Market.

Ortoli stayed only six months as head of that committee, and then Pompidou called him to head his cabinet, which he did from 1962 to 1966.

Ortoli was named high commissioner for planning in early 1966. Pompidou named him equipment minister in 1967 and a year later he was named education minister, a job he held only three months.

Ortoli was finance minister when Maurice Couve de Murville replaced Pompidou as premier later in 1968. After Pompidou was elected president, Ortoli was minister for industrial and scientific development in Jacques Chaban-Delmas' cabinet from 1969 until last year.

Ortoli entered politics when he was elected a deputy from a district in northern France in the 1968 elections. He will not run for office in the March elections because holding national political office is not compatible with the functions of a Common Market commissioner.

JAPANESE PAPER DIES

SEATTLE (AP) — The North American Post, one of the last of the Japanese-language newspapers in the United States, is dying.

Published here daily, the Post's readership is dwindling as first-generation Japanese die and their descendants turn to English newspapers.

There's a shortage of trained journalists fluent in both Japanese and English. Articles are written by hand because there's no typewriter here to reproduce the 3,000 characters of the Japanese language. And it's hard to find qualified printers.

"This is a dying business," says Takami Hibya, the Post's editor. Hibiya, 63, has considered retirement but stays on because it's hard to find staffers.

Only first-generation Japanese can be considered loyal readers, and they are all "74 or 85 or 90 by now," Hibiya said.

Some Stiffening in Prospect

The Speech from the Throne, which seems to be a panacea for all the country's ills — but was also pertinently described by Mr. Stanfield as "a pretty good public relations job" — will be better judged by the legislative bills which later are to be brought forward by the government. The generalities of a formal program will be reduced to specific facts embodied in the bills, and it is then that the policies must be fought through the opposition, with or without amendments.

The government's program now includes a number of items which it rejected when it had a comfortable majority in the Commons. Among them, for example, is a proposal to require that all companies operating under a federal charter should have Canadians holding more than half of the board directorships. The government originally saw this requirement as of little value, and this attitude has considerable logic to support it.

While the proposal could have some long-term benefits, it is the attitude of the board members rather than their nationality that determines a company's activities and its standing as a "good citizen" of Canada. Canadians put on a board to carry out a certain policy, regardless of its conformity with Canadian interests — as opposed to the interests of the country in which the head office was located — could be expected to do their job. The intent of the legislation could be nullified. But as a gesture, the move has merit, for it could encourage a climate of Canadianization which is needed in this country.

In the end, it must be the stockholders who determine a company's policies. A more important aspect of the foreign-owned corporation problem is the applicability of home-country laws to branch plants in Canada. This sort of thing has surfaced in situations where Canadian branches were called on to ship flour or trucks to Red China, for instance, but were prevented by United States pressure exerted on home offices in that country.

Promised legislation will also deal with restrictions on the purchase of land, and other new investment, by foreigners. Normally such restrictions may appear chauvinistic, but Canada hardly presents a normal situation, with almost all its oil resources and very high percentages of other essential resources owned abroad, and an alarming proportion of our industrial plants likewise under foreign control.

Screening measures for take-over purchases will again be put before Parliament — having been left over from the previous session — with federal veto powers on take-overs that are judged not in Canada's best interests. Similar restrictions are already in effect in regard to banking and communications companies, for example.

It appears that government legislation must be used to bolster the essential will to own and operate the economic resources of our country which is deficient in Canada. It is late in the day — and in the increasingly globally organized world of our era — to be taking such steps. Laws cannot substitute for a people's endeavor and purpose, for a nation's economic will to live. But the proposed measures may have a good effect on the Canadian public, along with some controls on our enterprising friends.

Something More in Keeping

British Columbia's recreation and resources minister, Mr. Bob Williams, should get broad support for his request to federal Indian affairs and northern development minister, Jean Chretien, to find a more appropriate name for what has been called Pacific Rim National Park. Mr. Williams urges that an Indian chief's name — Wickaninnish or Maquinna — be given to the new national park at Long Beach.

While "Pacific Rim" strives to establish the idea of Canadian participation in the group of nations around the shores of the Pacific Ocean, the concept is still a rather remote one and does not convey any real idea of the park and its uses. An Indian name would be much more appropriate and musical — and both those mentioned have long been associated with Vancouver Island's West Coast.

Now, as the final phase of the park's boundaries is being established, would be a good time to christen the park — one of Canada's finest — with a more appropriate name.

George Drew

A winter severe on elder statesmen now counts George Drew, former premier of Ontario and one-time national leader of the Conservative Party, among the departed. His passing recalls a vigorous career in which spectacular early victory in his home province ushered in a continuous provincial Tory regime from 1943, but did not lead him to the ultimate goal of heading the government of Canada. That was an honor reserved for his contemporary — and opponent for leadership — John Diefenbaker.

But if the chief office escaped him, Col. Drew's provincial career at least produced relative triumphs not only for his party, but for objectives he viewed as significant steps in Ontario's march into an era of changing times.

A commanding and personable figure, he served Canada in war and peace, winning respect if not always affection, and gained friends for this country from his Diefenbaker-appointed office of High Commissioner for Canada in London. As opposition leader in Ottawa his attacks on the Liberal administration earned wide public support, though insufficient to bring him to power.

Ministers Will Be on Call

OTTAWA — The ministerial roster system, instituted by Mr. Trudeau in September 1968, was the most predictable casualty of the indecisive general election.

There was a reasonable case for the arrangement or some modification of it. The argument was set out by the Prime Minister on September 25, 1968, within a fortnight of the opening session of the 28th Parliament. It might, in certain circumstances, have been very persuasive because leading men in all the parties at that time were strongly attracted to reforms already instituted, with generally good results, in the British House of Commons.

But the roster system provoked immediate protests from the Opposition parties. Much more was involved than the usual criticism of government actions to be expected of members on Mr. Speaker's left. A grievance had been born which did not die; which was instead rekindled by successive incidents leading to angry scenes and often to ministerial embarrassments.

It was perhaps expected by the Government that, with the passage of time the system would gain at least grudging acceptance by Conservatives, New Democrats and Social Crediters. Nothing of the kind happened: after four years, they remained as flatly opposed to the roster arrangement as they had been in the beginning.

Not the Best

In all likelihood, better and more lasting results would have been achieved if the Prime Minster had proceeded in a different fashion.

Parliament now sits for most of the year. On any day — in the absence of a roster system — about 30 ministers are required to be on hand for questioning. While the time allotted for questions may be as short as half an hour, the ministerial day is to some extent disrupted. Mr. Trudeau was concerned that members of cabinet, faced by an ever-increasing volume of business, should have more free days on which to concentrate in departmental matters.

It may also be the case, although the Prime Minister did not press this argument, that the presence of so many ministers in the House works against searching examinations and tends to encourage mere fishing expeditions. If there is particular interest in a certain subject, one minister may indeed monopolize the limelight for a longer period than he would probably desire. Mr. Speaker Lamoureux tends, however, to intervene after a first wave of questions in deference to the diversified interests of members on both sides.

British practice is now quite different. At Westminster, question period is often confined to the grilling of a single minister. The Trudeau system fell far short of this. It required a general attendance on Wednesdays (when time, however, is very limited) and established, for the rest of the week, a schedule of ministerial duty days.

Much of the trouble resulted from the fact that it was introduced arbitrarily by a simple Prime Ministerial statement. This was resented because the mood of the House was then reasonably co-operative. After all, the Government had a fresh mandate and another election was not to be expected for four years. In this mood, agreement had been reached on provisional rules to govern the House (experimental arrangements having lapsed with dissolution) and also on a reference of the permanent rules to a House committee.

The right of the Prime Minister to introduce the change was not questioned. It was, however, argued strenuously then and later that, since the change affected the House, the House ought to have been consulted. Robert Stanfield's protest was relatively restrained but later Conservative criticisms were more in tune with the comments of Stanley Knowles, who denounced the move as "offensive," and of Andre Fortin, Social Credit spokesman, who called it "an act of sabotage."

It is possible that the committee, had it considered the subject, would have agreed on a smaller change — at least at the outset — than that instituted by Mr. Trudeau. Even so there would have been an agreed basis on which to build. Instead, there was acrimonious controversy from the very beginning.

Furthermore, almost any system involves discrepancies between theory and practice. The Opposition began to specialize in roster-watching and alert critics, such as Tom Bell — now the Conservative whip — soon discovered that the new system, in actual operation, offered splendid opportunities for needling and embarrassing their Treasury Bench opponents and, in particular, the Prime Minister, who whom every day was duty day.

For Survival

For the survival of the present Government, it is obviously necessary that ministers should be on call. It does not follow that they must always be in the House. In fact they will not be and it may happen on occasion, as it has in the past, that the division bell will ring for a long time before roll call. But a Government with 109 members is simply in no position to invite unnecessary quarrels with a three-party Opposition. Any attempt, in these circumstances, to resurrect the roster would be political madness.

Thus the system for the moment is dead and it will stay dead at least until another general election. Will it then be revived? Probably not, if past embarrassments weigh with this Government or impress its successors. But the arguments for it, perhaps with some modifications, are still good. If there was initial agreement, and thus the basis of co-operation, the system might well be a useful innovation. It will be unfortunate if an idea of some promise is now abandoned because the original experiment was initiated in the wrong way in 1968.

ART STOTT

Then, There's Neighborliness

Half a century ago, when we'd finished our Saturday morning chores, a couple of us often trudged up Irving Road and followed the path through the copse of trees that shielded the southeast corner of Margaret Jenkins School ground to the gravelled yard which was a primitive basketball court. We packed our own ball, a leather covered spheroid that had taken on the shape of a Japanese orange, and practiced shooting.

That, if memory serves, represented about all there was to shared community use of schools at the time.

Nobody kicked us off. Nobody seemed to know we were there, but if in summer you tried to hold a pick-up baseball game on the sloping field further to the east, you might encounter disapproving school authority. School authority didn't want you hanging around, even though you couldn't get into the building itself.

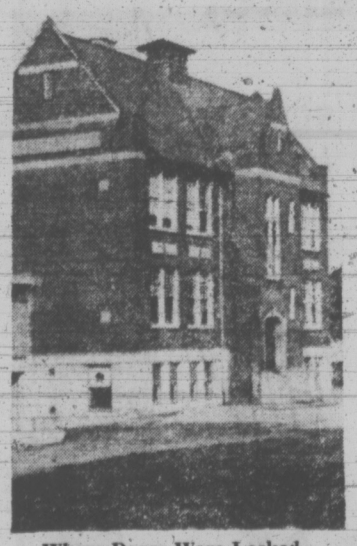
Change

A few years later, when Percy "Pop" Payne moved into the district and organized sports for the youngsters, things changed — but not the school authorities. "Pop's" teams played largely on vacant lots when the game was soccer, on Mills Road when it was street hockey, and eventually moved up, as the Foul Bay Monarchs, to juvenile competition in parks and at Skinner's gym for roller hockey in Victoria West. Basketball? It went by default to Moss Street school where a couple of young kids called Patrick and the Five Points gang hung out.

It took a long, long time for school authority to view extra-curricular use of school grounds and facilities as anything but a damn nuisance. Schools were built at taxpayers' expense for the sole purpose of schooling and standardized physical education activity within the schools' jurisdiction. Any outside use involved wear and tear, and upkeep was high as it was.

Fair enough to let the pupils kick a football around, heave baseballs or scrimmage at lacrosse for half an hour or so before classes started, again at lunch time and for an hour or an hour and a half after 3 o'clock. Beyond that, no dice — with exceptions so rare they became major events.

The years and a more demanding public effected their changes. School auditoriums began to be used increasingly for evening lectures, meetings, musical events. Organized basketball moved into the gym — a process initiated by Victoria High, which had the best gym in town and produced the best basketball players.



Where Doors Were Locked

And then came the explosion of modern building — after a 30-year dormancy following the outbreak of the First World War. Handsome new facilities emerged. The taxpayers, dissatisfied with the idea that schools should be opened about 8 in the morning and locked at 5 in the afternoon, five days a week, wanted in. They were paying the shot; they should have more opportunities to use the facilities, even beyond expanding night school courses.

So now the Greater Victoria School Board, Saanich Council and provincial education department are working toward an integrated school-community centre at Burnside and Acorn. This appears to be a normal process in social evolution, expanding a concept already rooted in shared co-operative use of public facilities. Sure, the facilities will wear out faster. Anything exposed to heavier traffic doesn't stand up as long as something carefully walled off. But so long as use doesn't become abuse, the cost is justified.

Apart from the increased physical use of plant, with the greater opportunity it should afford for adult education, general recreation and healthy self-improvement, the trend holds promise of an additional important development — good neighborhood.

Here's a chance to bring the people of a district together more entertainingly and less expensively than through that social occasion which is the shopping visit to the super-market. If it can create a cohesion and a sense of belonging to a locality, it could produce valuable results in better feelings among neighbors, greater pride in the home area, and conceivably improved relationships between the generations.

Insular

It seems a characteristic of the aging process and the closer congestion of people in urban surroundings that they become more insular. Their attitudes to neighborliness change. The neighbor is frequently considered good because he keeps his lawn cut, offers across-the-fence greetings in a friendly manner, minds his own business and lets you mind yours. Admirable as those characteristics may be, they lack the warmth of an earlier neighborliness which expressed concern for and interest in the people living a block or two away without necessarily being nosey.

Maybe school-community integration of facilities will bring the neighbors closer together. A resident might even find that the man he took for a stuffed-shirt in the house at the corner is a pretty decent guy after all; or the people he took for hippies aren't really bad folk when you know them a bit better.

A Nature Ramble With Skipper

FREEMAN KING

The recent heavy rainfall has made many changes in the landscape. Now the streams and rivers are running in full spate, each singing its own song. They seem to say they are living again, giving life to many things, ever moving back to the ocean whence they came, but in some places their rush may be destructive.

The ponds are full again bringing a new lift to plants and animals. Here, too, the puddle ducks can find food and rest.

On the higher ground the ponds and sloughs are full to overflowing, making little "waterfalls" that cascade down over the rock faces, giving a pleasing effect with their white spray.

Many of the rivers and streams have overflowed their banks so that the old flood plains are once again submerged, as they were centuries ago.

But the waters have caused great damage to homes and destroyed many things that were man-made. This is because man himself has not taken the trouble to "read" the landscape and understand the risks on low and flat land.

Farm land covered by the waters will still benefit, for the waters have brought silt which will spread over the land and make a very good medium for the next season's crop, whether it be grass or roots.

Where the low lands have been pastures and heavily grazed, they become lumpy, with bare patches and many dropping of animals. The waters will have broken these down and levelled the ground thus enabling the water table to become more even, so providing moisture for the summer and making better grazing for cattle.

If one walks in the forest he will find a vast difference, for there the floor is not wet and sticky, but is like a huge sponge. It has absorbed the water in the layers of "duff" and spread it in a more even pattern. The trees, with their tens of thousands of needles, the branches, lichens and mosses broke the impact of the heavy raindrops and caused them to fall more gently to the ground. The forest floor will hold the moisture so that during summer's hot days there will be water to enable the trees to grow and beautiful forest flowers once again to bring forth their blossoms — a place for many living animals and birds to bring forth their progeny and a place to live.

Perhaps man should take a hard look at the ways of nature and learn a lesson of survival without damage to himself.

WASHINGTON — No one thinks about the B52s, where they come from, where they go to, what they are doing. B52s fly in packs of three. Each pack carries a load of 270 bombs. From a distance of half a mile I have watched these bombs fall onto supposed Vietcong positions in open countryside just north of Quang Tri.

You do not hear the planes, 30,000 feet overhead. You do not hear the bombs as they fall because they fall faster than sound. You do not, at first, hear the explosions. You simply see one fountain of earth after another gush rapidly into the sky like a row of bullets chasing along a wall in a bad war movie—which, after all, is what this is too.

The noise of the explosions hits you, one after the other, as the individual fountains mass into one great 300 ft. high blanket of brown earth and smoke and dust and, the Americans hope, human pieces.

In a city, the craters are less even, less deep and the air is filled not with earth and stones but with chunks of concrete, shards of glass, slivers of steel, hunks of brick and again, the Americans hope, many, many, many pieces of men, of women and of Vietnamese children.

Asked if civilian targets were now being hit in Hanoi, a Pentagon spokesman replied: "We do not hit civilian targets. Correction: we do not target civilian targets."

'No One Cares'

Well, Nixon won't tell us just how he decides what targets in a city are military or not, but it doesn't matter for any distinction is irrelevant. The bombs fall about 300 feet apart, most of them — but not all — within a box about 0.6 of a mile wide and 1.8 miles long. In the centre of a small city very few targets, military or otherwise, are that large.

Mr. Nixon and his advisers knew perfectly well that they were hitting civilian areas of Hanoi and Haiphong. They did so deliberately, and they did it because they were confident that no one cares.

Pentagon spokesmen say officially that the bombing is to stop a new enemy offensive in preparation around Saigon. That is a lie. It takes at least three months for troops to move from the Hanoi area down the trail into the south of South Vietnam.

The officials know that it is a lie and they know that journalists know it also and so privately they whisper that, actually, the purpose of the raids is diplomatic.

Strengthen Will

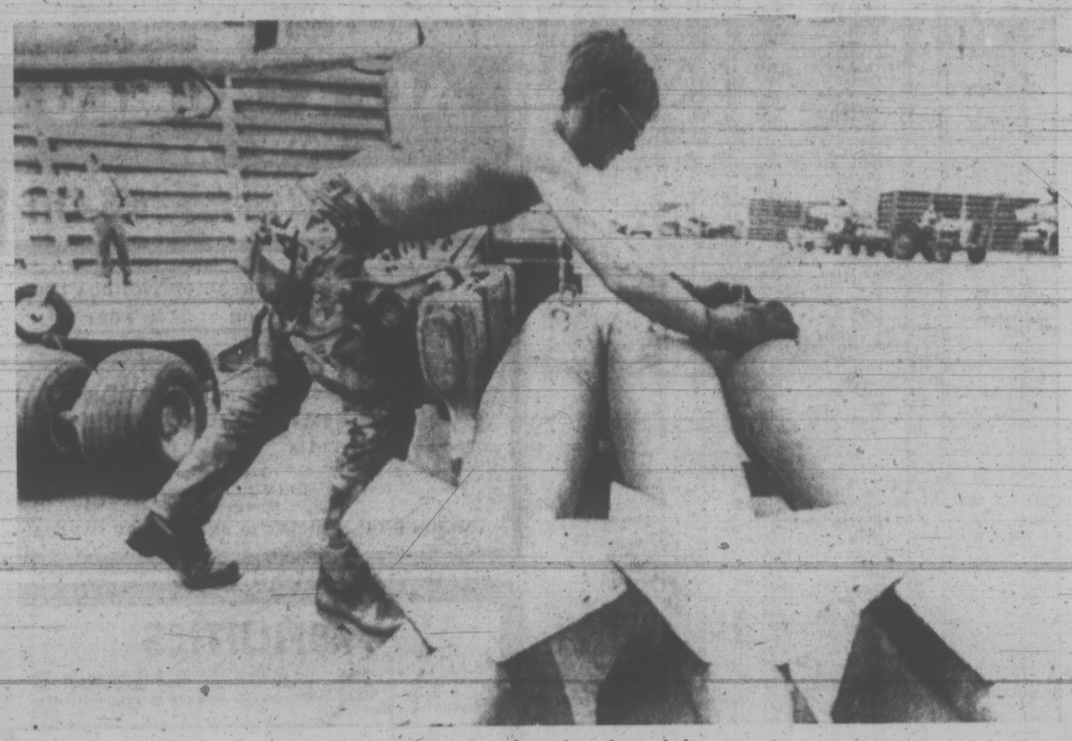
That too is a lie. For years American Presidents have been told by the CIA that bombing the North serves only to strengthen the resolve of the North Vietnamese and for years they have ignored this knowledge because each of them found in bombing women and children a way of persuading himself that he was "hitting 'em where it hurts". That's what Nixon thinks now.

Nixon was not carpeting the centre of Hanoi with bombs because he believes any longer in the cause of South Vietnam and his ally President Thieu.

The nine-point peace memorandum released by Hanoi in October made clear that the Americans had abandoned any claim that South Vietnam should be recognised as a sovereign country, and in his press conference 10 days ago Kissinger reiterated that this demand of Thieu's would not be met. Thieu had good grounds for complaint.

Nixon knows that this is not a war in which Americans are prepared to die, but he knows also that it is one in which they are prepared to kill. He knows that the crews of the B52s just regard their job as any other, one to be done.

He knows that after they dropped their bombs onto the lives of the people below them, they simply turned their planes around, took out of the oven the special Christmas dinner turkey, cranberry sauce, apple pie and salad with 'Thousand Island dressing' and then went to the film back at the base, with never a thought for what has happened down there, 30,000 feet below them.



Preparing the bombs for delivery

Whenever, over the last five weeks, you asked the gilded members of the Georgetown cocktail set — the people for whom Nixon publicly expresses so much contempt, but with whom his servant Henry Kissinger nonetheless sips and nibbles and has so much fun, people who, in their Dior gowns ("Dior because it's cheaper, darling — I can get credit from dear Mr. Dior") and who in their lovely damask drawing rooms expressed their sorrow that McGovern hadn't been a better man because it meant that they actually had to vote Republican ("My dear, it was too awful — but there was the one consolation of knowing that Henry was there and only last week he assured me himself that all will be well very soon, don't worry.").

Well, all these people, who "just hate" the war, all of them — if, over the last five weeks, one ever expressed scepticism that peace was really at hand — replied very earnestly: "No. No. You don't understand. Nixon has to end the war. It's so unpopular here."

Another lie. The only war issue in America today is the PoWs. When Hanoi announced that the B52s bombing Hanoi had hit a PoW camp, a Pentagon spokesman denounced the communists; this was clear evidence, he said, that the North Vietnamese had broken the Geneva Convention by housing PoWs near military targets. Like hospitals, homes and schools and roads that people like to walk along. Like railway sidings and workshops that stand next door to flats where people once hoped to live.

Why don't Americans care? Why are there no massive demonstrations in front of the White House? Why has no one resigned from his official post in horror at this latest action?

For some people it's because they have cared too long — seven years is a hell of a time for your anguish to go unheeded: finally you just despair. For many people it's because they never cared. Not about Vietnam and the Vietnamese, anyway. They were part of the peace movement, but all they cared about was that American draftees should not die. Nixon has granted them that.

And so they ate their Christmas dinners contentedly, knowing that next year they, their sons and their brothers can go to law school, get married, buy a new car, have children, attend the Rotary Club, secure in the knowledge that their lives won't be disrupted by war. What else matters? Well, perhaps a $20 subscription to adopt a child (tick the face you want and you will be sent your child's photo).

Now Nixon really is very angry. He is angry because what he wanted from a peace settlement was the PoWs, and then he and the rest of America could forget about the Vietnamese. He is angry because just a couple of weeks ago he sat in a pew and heard his good friend Dr. Norman Vincent Peale extol him as 'one of the great peacemakers of history'. Nixon liked that, even more because it was not only flattering but surely correct? His trips to China and Moscow, his efforts, well, his apparent efforts, to end the war — were not all these evidence of the truth the words that Norman (dear, saintly man) used of him?

Anti-Care Apostle

It matters who tricked who if trickery there was. It matters if peace really was at hand when Kissenger smirked it on 26 October. It matters if Nixon then upped the ante. It matters if the North Vietnamese altered their position during the negotiations since the election. It matters if it was President Thieu's objections that Hanoi refused to accept. It matters that the peace talks failed.

But what really matters most of all is Nixon's reaction to that failure. What really matters is that for four years America is to be governed and the world seriously affected by the apostle of anti-care, by a man who acts out of impotent rage, a man incapable of understanding the relative values of human life and his own view of his own "honor", a man who is filled with hatred of those who try to cross him.

The B52 raids on Hanoi and Haiphong have no purpose, diplomatic, military or political. The mission of these pilots flying out of Guam and Thailand is to punish, to inflict suffering and death on a people whose mistake is not to realize they are dealing with a man who tears the wings off flies. For, that's what this bombing is.

Can't Be Excused

I believe in what is known as "objective journalism" in which the reporter at least attempts not to allow his prejudices to influence either his judgments or his selection of the facts that he thinks most relevant to the story. I don't believe it is actually attainable. But I do think those are good rules to try and follow.

But there are times when such attempts as "objectivity" are neither helpful nor desirable. There is nothing in the world to excuse what Nixon has done. One day he and his philosophy will be as despised as the Spanish inquisitors are today.

But given the Americans' apparently total lack of interest in what their country is doing now that they themselves are not dying doing it, that will be a long time yet; and it is no consolation at all to people with names like Kim, Diem, Phan, Hoang and Nguyen, who do not hear the big black planes because the planes fly so high; who do not hear the bombs fall because the bombs fall faster than sound; but who, in their hospitals and their homes and their schools suddenly see and hear and feel their mothers, their fathers, their children and their lives being destroyed in agony.

Europe United, But Not on Its Foreign Policy

By ROBERT STEPHENS
London Observer

Whether the European Community is destined to become a dynamic new world power, or to remain a fumbling confederation of medium powers is a matter of long-term conjuncture. What is certain, however, is that the enlarged Community is now faced almost immediately as a group with several major international problems on which it needs a common policy.

These are mainly economic questions of trade and money, but they all have political and even military implications. They affect the whole range of Europe's relations with the United States, the Communist powers and the Third World. For the enlargement of the Community has coincided with other big changes in the world scene.

Money System

Some of these changes have been accelerated and complicated by the Community's own evolution. For example, the building of a new world money system, to replace that which was shattered when the United States took unilateral action to protect the dollar in August 1971, has now somehow to be coordinated with Europe's commitment to forming its own economic and monetary union by 1980.

The aim of an increasingly liberal international trading system envisaged in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) has to be reconciled with the increase in trade discrimination created by the enlargement of the Community and by its special arrangements with some 70 other countries. In the process special care will be needed to ensure that the interests of the developing countries of the Third World do not suffer even more than now.

There are also contradictions to be resolved inside Europe itself. Some way has to be found of ensuring that Western Europe's movement towards union does not hamper current efforts to bring the Eastern and Western halves of the continent, including the two Germanys, closer together.

Finally, there is Europe's attitude to the new world situation created by the Sino-Soviet conflict, America's rapprochement with both Russia and China, and the emergence of Japan as an industrial giant. The development of American and European trade and technological cooperation with Russia is part of the East-West detente, and the provision of reasonable trade outlets for Japan may have an important influence on that country's future political attitudes.

During the coming year the Europeans will find themselves involved in two interrelated sets of negotiations, with America and Russia. The most complex and the most far-reaching will be with the United States, still the world's strongest military and economic Power, and Western Europe's principal protector. The outcome of these negotiations will affect both the future of the Atlantic alliance and the shape of the world economy.

From the beginning, American attitudes towards the European Community have been ambivalent. When, for a decade after World War II, Europe was weak and politically divided, the United States encouraged it to become stronger and more united. The Americans did so not only as a general strengthening of the Western alliance, but also in the hope that Europe would one day stand on its own feet, or at least take a bigger share of the burden of Western defence.

Political Benefit

They were prepared to accept some increased discrimination against American trade in order to secure the political benefits of a more united Europe. On these grounds Washington also favoured British entry into EEC.

But in recent years America's anxieties about Europe have begun to overshadow her approval. Disillusion with the Vietnam war, combined with a persistent American balance of payments deficit have strengthened American public and Congressional opposition to expensive overseas military commitments.

President Nixon reaffirmed, during his first term as President, America's intention not to cut her forces in Europe without Allied agreement, but the whole trend of his foreign policy has been to limit American commitments and call on America's allies to contribute more to their own defence.

In the case of Europe the pressure has been stronger because the prosperous Europeans can clearly afford to pay more for American protection and because the danger of war in Europe has receded. Moreover, American resentment at European attitudes has been stimulated by French monetary policy, which seemed to be aimed at deliberately undermining the dollar, and by the extension of the Common Market's preferential trading system into new areas, such as the Mediterranean, which threatens some American exports.

Some of these American trade grievances have been exaggerated. They are often of minor significance compared with the advantages to the United States of a strong European Community which is committed to generally low tariff barriers and to support for the developing countries.

But they have already produced an unreasonable degree of strain in U.S.-European relations. It has also to be remembered that, in the trade and tariff field it is usually not the President of the United States but the Congress which sets the limits of American policy, and Nixon, despite his landslide victory in the Presidential election last November, is not master of the Congress.

Nuclear Sharing

Parallel with the talks on trade, money and the U.S. balance of payments, Nixon will inevitably raise the issue of U.S. troops in Europe. He will want to know how much more the Europeans will contribute to the upkeep of these forces or their partial replacement.

This issue will also be involved in the talks to be held between NATO and the Warsaw Pact during the year on mutual balanced force reductions in Central Europe.

Discussion of European defence could also raise another question: nuclear sharing. The McMahon Act and the Nassau Agreement, under which America supplies Britain with technical knowledge on nuclear weapons, are due to expire in 1973. If the United States renews the agreements for Britain, will they also be extended to France? And how will agreements reached with Russia bilaterally in the strategic arms limitations talks (SALT) prevent the United States from refurbishing Europe's nuclear weaponry?

Since the Europeans themselves are divided over their attitudes to defence and to political and military relations with the United States, they may be hard pressed to find a common policy on these subjects. For while France, like the other West Europeans, does not want to see any U.S. troop withdrawals from Europe, President Pompidou both clings to an independent nuclear deterrent and seems to fear a new Yalta, a Soviet-U.S. deal on Europe over the heads of the Europeans.

The present British government might like to see closer nuclear cooperation with France, but, as the condition for this, America is likely still to insist on a reintegration of French nuclear weapons into the NATO system. A purely "European deterrent" would create alarm all round, raising the spectre of German access to nuclear weapons, a prospect intolerable of Russia, America and most Europeans themselves. Nor could a "European deterrent" be credible in the absence of a unified European government capable of deciding to use it.

The talks on mutual cuts are only part of the vast East-West negotiation that will get under way in Europe during the coming year. The centrepiece will be the Conference on European Security and Cooperation expected to open in the summer. Here the main group interest of the European Community will be the development of economic cooperation with Russia and Eastern Europe, which the Communist powers hope to promote at the conference.

Ignore Commitment

The members of the Community are pledged by treaty to adopt a common commercial policy towards third counties. In fact, they have often ignored this commitment in the past, expecially the French in their dealings with Russia and Eastern Europe. The Community now needs to redefine its commercial policy towards the East, especially in view of the new technique of "cooperation in production" — Western firms or governments helping to build and run factories in the Soviet bloc.

Indeed, in the coming preoccupations with America and Russia, the temptation will be great for the Europeans to neglect the rest of the world. Yet the area most urgently needing a common European policy and most affecting European vital interests is the Mediterranean and the Middle East.

But can the Community hope to have a common foreign policy on this or any other major subject? That is certainly its declared aim. The last Paris summit meeting of the Nine proclaimed: "The time has come for Europe to recognize clearly the unity of its interests, the extent of its capacities and the magnitude of its duties. Europe must be able to make its voice heard in world affairs and to make an original contribution commensurate with its human, intellectual and material resources. It must affirm its own views in international relations, as befits its mission to be open to the world and for progress, peace and cooperation."

Fine words, but likely difficult to put into practice.

Whopping Increase In Lumber Exports

By AL FORREST
Times Business Editor

A record 9 billion board feet of timber was exported from Canada to the United States in 1972, a 26.8 per cent increase over 1971.

However, the evidence grows that the great housing boom is winding down in the United States and exports this year may end up slightly below the 9 billion figure.

Vacancy rates of new homes are growing in the U.S., indicating that supply is at last overtaking demand. By September the ratio of new homes for sale compared with homes sold had risen to 6.1 compared to 5.3 for the same month in 1971.

Rental vacancies had risen from 5.5 per cent in the second quarter to 5.8 per cent in the third quarter.

There were two optimistic factors for British Columbia lumber companies.

The first is that 1972 was such a tremendous export year that 1973 will be poor only by comparison. The export outlook for 1973 is still good to excellent.

In addition, while home construction is expected to decline, non-residential construction remains strong and demand will be high for lumber for repairs and renovations.

Overall, 1973 should rank second only to 1972 in terms of lumber and other wood products export to the United States.

Housing starts in 1973 are expected to hit 2.10 million compared with an estimated total of 2.44 million in 1972 and 2.08 million in 1971.

Total starts in 1972 to the end of November was 2.27 million.

Consumption of softwood in the United States totalled 41.5 billion board feet in 1972. House construction accounted for 50 per cent of this total.

The current high production of lumber was achieved despite a limited supply of logs on both sides of the border due to work stoppages during 1972 and rail car shortages.

Generally, the U.S. economy is very strong but some economists and bankers are expecting tighter credit and higher interest rates this year.

The prime rate had risen to 6 per cent at year's end.

Mortgages in the U.S. were on average below the Canadian level. Average interest rate south of the border in October was 7.62 per cent.

In Canada, 9 per cent rates are general.

A major concern for Canadian exporters is the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar against the American. At present the gap is closing to near parity but it is subject to sudden fluctuations.

PWA to Take Up Slack

Air Canada is cutting back its Victoria to Vancouver flights to three a day from seven effective April 30, but the slack will be taken up by Pacific Western Airlines.

The three Air Canada flights will use DC-9 jets with seating capacity of 94, replacing the 48-seat Viscounts.

PWA, which is to play a larger role as a regional carrier, will increase its flights from four to seven per day to maintain a total daily frequency of 10 for the two airlines.

Present frequency is 11 for the two airlines.

The changeover on April 30 will be in preparation for the peak summer schedule and the introduction of the DC-9s will help Air Canada to maintain it present total seat capacity on the line.

Last summer Air Canada ran nine flights per day with PWA running four.

The Canadian Transport Commission sees Air Canada's role as a long-haul airline and two of the three DC-9 jet trips out of Victoria will be proceeding further east after a stop in Vancouver.

The three-flights per day is looked upon as a minimum by Air Canada officials and the number of flights is more likely to increase rather than decrease.

Bulk of the customers flying Air Canada in future are expected to be those making connections for other flights out of Vancouver or flying from Victoria to points east of Vancouver. However, tickets bought on PWA are honored on Air Canada planes and vice versa along the Victoria to Vancouver route.

Business continued to be brisk despite the sharing of passengers with PWA and competition from seaplanes. Seaplane business was more competitive in the summer months than in slack periods.

Overall, Air Canada's passenger loads were up in 1972 over the previous year on the Victoria operation.

New Air Fare Fills Seats

Victor Emery of Montreal, the man who designed Air Canada's new fare structure, was in Victoria Friday to defend the new rates.

Emery, market development director for Air Canada, said the new rates were designed to increase the number of passengers travelling at slack periods.

Before the new rates came into effect in October Air Canada was operating at 60 per cent or 61 per cent average capacity. About 40 per cent of the seats were empty.

After the new rates came into effect the planes were flying at about 70 per cent capacity, he said.

"We call vacant seats a waste factor. Our calculations are that the new fare structure has decreased waste by 10 points."

EVEN OUT PEAKS

He said an airline can not be content simply to increase the number of passengers because this would produce overloads at peak times. The fare structure had to be revised to even out the peaks and valleys.

At slack times long distance flights have fare discounts of 30 per cent. Short haul discounts are 20 per cent.

Local flights should have fare increases, according to the company's studies, but these have not yet been implemented, he said.

Emery said the thrust of the new rate structure was to end the process of long-haul passengers subsidizing the flights of short-haul passengers.

COMPETITIVE

He said at the old rates, the price was about 100 per cent higher than charter rates. New slack long distance fares are about 30 per cent to 40 per cent above charter rates.

Air Canada was not moving heavily into domestic charters because they seemed inappropriate to the type of service demanded inside Canada. Domestic customers were mainly businessmen or families travelling on holidays. There was not much flexibility on the time available for travel so regularly scheduled lines were sought.

Businessmen were basically looking for good service and other customers were looking for low prices and frequent schedules.

CHARTER FLIGHTS

Charter flights were more appropriate for overseas travel which often could be on a more flexible time schedule for the traveler.

Emery said the new fares were not only price changes but represented a new direction for Air Canada.

The aim was to cut costs by filling seats. This meant a way had to be found to fill planes a slack periods without overloading them at peak periods.

In the past airlines have offered discounts to youth, senior citizens, groups and families. Now Air Canada is making special fares available to everyone who is in a position to travel at slack times.

"We felt it was more equitable to offer special rates to everyone, not just the young and senior citizens," Emery said.

Canada Lacks 'A Presence'

The in word among Japanese business men is "presence" — and Canada doesn't have it.

What they mean is Canada has no corporate image. There is no big demand for Canadian goods because Japanese are scarcely aware of Canadian products as being a distinct entity from American goods.

This lack of a separate vital identity is shown in that Canada's share of the Japanese market has remained almost dormant for the past 12 years.

In 1960 Canada accounted for 4.5 per cent of Japan's foreign purchases. Today it has risen to only 5.1 per cent, far behind the United States and Australia.

A Canada-Japan trade council, just back from a visit to Japan, reported they found a total lack of awareness of Canada as a national identity and the absence of any recognition of Canada's manufacturing capacity.

Generally speaking, the Japanese did not recognize Canadian brand names of products typical of Canada.

Japanese businessmen said: "the market is here but where is the Canadian presence?"

Colonel Robert L. Houston, president of the Canada-Japan trade council, comments: "Many Japanese do not distinguish between Canadians and Americans."

He said it is ironic Canadians complain that Americans take us for granted and know nothing about Canadian affairs but do not seem concerned that Japan has similar reactions to Canada.

He said it is quite wrong to feel that the Japanese as a whole are aware of Canada, despite the rise in tourism.

The Japanese, as consumers, are almost totally unaware of Canada, he said.

Value of the potential market in Japan will rise to $73 billion annually by 1980, he said.

Gaining a share of that market would be both time-consuming and expensive but very worthwhile over the long term, he said.

"There is surely something very unbusinesslike about ignoring one of the world's most promising markets."

To encourage imports Japan is reducing tariffs by some 20 per cent on 1,865 items in manufacturing, mining and processed farm products.

Examples of the proposed new tariff levels include canned fish 12 per cent (down from 15 per cent), farm chemicals 8 per cent (from 10 per cent), pulp 4 per cent (5 per cent), newsprint 4.4 per cent (5.5 per cent) aluminum products 8 per cent (10 per cent), medical instruments 6 per cent (7.5 per cent).

Nanaimo Harbor Plea

OTTAWA (CP) — Transport Minister Jean Marchand is considering a request to allow Nanaimo citizens to attend meetings in Ottawa Jan. 10 and 11 which will discuss the fate of planned harbor development.

The development program was halted by the environment department for ecological reasons.

A number of government departments will compare reports on the project at meetings next week and T. C. Douglas, NDP MP for the area, wants Nanaimo citizens to be allowed to attend the meeting.

As an alternative, he wants no decision taken on the harbor project until further meetings are held in Nanaimo.

Mr. Douglas said Friday that he made these representations to Mr. Marchand and that the minister had promised to look into the issue and give his answer early next week.

A Matter of Incorporation

• YOUR TAXES •

By I. H. ASPER

Doctors, lawyers, dentists and many other groups of professionals should take heart from a decision of the federal court handed down a few weeks ago.

The ruling, in effect, settles in favor of the professional practitioner the question of whether or not the tax law allows him to carry out the non-professional aspects of his work through a corporation.

For several years now, tax advisers have recommended to their clients that they incorporate management companies to handle the administrative side of their work.

Done correctly, the profit arising from this operation will often be taxed at considerably lower rates than if the profits were earned by the individual practitioner.

The tax problems for professionals aren't created by the Income Tax Act, as much as by the governing bodies of some professional organizations. For example, the professional organizations don't allow their members to incorporate their practices. Therefore, all income is taxed at individual rather than corporate rates.

A business corporation netting $50,000 will pay tax at the 25 per cent rate. The individual, depending in which province he lives, would pay nearly 50 per cent tax on the same income. The advantages of being incorporated are rather clear.

The reason given for the refusal to allow doctors and similar professionals to incorporate is that the essence of professional practice is the personal, as opposed to business, relationship between doctor and patient; that there is full personal liability, not the limited liability a corporation provides, in case of malpractice.

The argument by the professional societies is weak. They do a disservice to their members by adopting it. Perhaps the fault lies not so much with the governing bodies but rather with the provincial governments which regulate those bodies.

In some states of the United States, professional incorporation is allowed. The personal liability aspect is resolved by making the individual practitioner personally liable for malpractice.

The general rule across the provinces is to prohibit these incorporations. However, there is nothing in either the professional code or tax law to prevent the professional from setting up a corporation to carry out those aspects of his work which are purely business, or administrative, but not professional.

Then it becomes a technical matter to determine how much the total profits should be allocated to the professional work, and how much to the corporation.

The will always be a natural bias on the taxpayer's part toward moving the highest possible portion of profits into the management corporation, and this is a legitimate area of dispute between taxpayer and tax collector.

However, during the tax department's reign of terror against almost all tax planning, which began about 1967 and is only now subsiding, revenue officials began to attack these taxpayers not only on the amount of income split between individual and corporation, but attacked the concept in its entirety.

Here's how it worked. The doctor would incorporate a management company. The company would be owned by himself, or his wife and children, or some sort of family combination.

The company would then enter into an agreement to provide the doctor with premises at a fixed rent, provide equipment for a fee, lab service or what have you, as well as provide a staff for reception, technicians, accounting and so on.

For all these services a fee would be charged equal to what the doctor would pay to a stranger for these services.

The fee to the management company would reduce the doctor's income, at his top bracket, which might be over 60 per cent, and be taxed at 25 per cent in the family company.

As well, the company could reduce its income be hiring his wife as manager at a reasonable salary. This would qualify her to contribute to the Canada Pension Plan for sufficient years to, in effect, double the family social security at nominal cost.

★ ★ ★

All in all, good tax planning. After Ticat coach Ralph Sazio won his case where he claimed that he could incorporate himself as a football coach, newspaper columnist, TV personality and what have you, it was assumed the revenue department would cool its relentless attack on doctors' management companies.

Not so. It continues, but perhaps the most recent case will finally move the minister of national revenue to call off what is really a petty war.

In this particular case, a doctor and his three partners set up a traditional-type management company owned by them and their wives. The department attacked it on the ground that the whole thing was a sham, or an artificial transaction to artificially avoid tax. The tax appeal board upheld the department.

Now, on appeal, the federal court has said that it's perfectly legal; so what's all the fuss.

The decision should motivate doctors, lawyers, architects, engineers, dentists and other professionals to examine their financial affairs to determine whether or not there's room for a personal management corporation in their future.

If they decide that there is, they must make sure the company qualifies as an active business company under the new tax reform rules in order to qualify for the low 25-per-cent tax rate.

Asper is a Winnipeg lawyer and leader of the Manitoba Liberal Party.

Falling Demand Hurts Snowmobile Makers

MONTREAL (CP) — The big snowmobile growth boom has come to an end and the industry is going through what executives refer to as a "period of adjustment" that is quickly stripping away manufacturers.

In 1963, about 65 firms were turning out the machines in North America.

Jean Bertrand, executive director of the International Snowmobile Industry Association, said in an interview there are "probably not more than 40 firms operating now, and I wouldn't be surprised if we are down to 20 or 25 by the end of the year."

Continental sales reached about 550,000 in 1970-71, the last year of a 10-year period of spectacular growth that saw sales soar up to 50 per cent a year.

Since then sales have levelled off at an annual growth rate of six to eight per cent.

"The shakeup in the industry has forced large and small manufacturers alike — including the industry giant Bombardier Ltd. — to look hard at their production runs.

One of the major causes of failure is said to be overproduction brought on by over-optimistic sales forecasts.

"A few years ago it was a booming market and everybody thought there would be no end to it," a Bombardier official said.

Bombardier, whose Ski-Doo holds the largest piece — about 40 per cent — of the North American market, is moving cautiously during the adjustment period.

To avoid an inventory backup, the company has slowed production at its Valcourt plant 60 miles east of Montreal. Sales at the manufacturer level for the first nine months of 1972 are "significantly lower" than in recent years, the company says.

Nine-month sales at Oct. 31 were $99.7 million compared with $114 million for the corresponding period in 1971, with profits down to $2 million from $10.5 million.

Laurent Beaudoin, Bombardier president, said the market is "more competitive" and the industry has "probably overestimated the total demand for new vehicles."

He said the "increase of used vehicles available on the market" is one reason for the reduced demand for new snowmobiles.

The industry association estimates sales to date this season to be about eight per cent ahead of last year.

The industry is rife with rumors of shutdowns and halted production, which tend most often to occur with small firms without the financial backing to ride over rough periods, although some of the larger firms have pulled out in recent years.

Merger Effects 'Neutral'

WASHINGTON (WP) The effects of conglomerate mergers on competition may be "largely neutral," according to a U.S. federal trade commission staff report.

The study, which examines nine large conglomerate organizations that engaged in extensive merger activities in the 1960s, fails to support either side of the ongoing debate on the effects of the conglomerate merger movement.

The study's findings lend no ammunition either to those who have contended that adverse, anti-competitive consequences will follow when giant companies merge, nor to those who have argued that desirable effects will result in increased efficiency.

Among the report's major conclusions are:

—The conglomerates made few, and only minor, changes in the operations of the firms they required, leaving the acquired firms to operate much as they did when they were separate entities.

—When the conglomerates diversified, they generally acquired "rather insignificant positions in industries with low or intermediate levels of concentration." By and large, they did not acquire firms with great market power.

Noting that the data collected in the study were limited to periods of between two and three years after the acquisitions, H. Michael Mann, director of the FTC's bureau of economics, said that the study's conclusions should be viewed "cautiously."

He said the most serious consequence of the conglomerate merger movement was the loss of information available to the public — to policy makers, stockholders, and potential competitors.

The acquired firms' sales and profits figures are absorbed by the parent company and presented in aggregate totals so that information about individual products and markets is lost.

Air Firm Suspension Requested

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Civil Aeronautics Board (C.A.B.) has received a formal complaint recommending temporary suspension of the foreign air carrier permit of Laker Airways, a British independent carrier. Under the permit Laker flies to and from the United States.

The CAB's enforcement bureau charged Laker with operating illegal charter flights and said it has refused to comply with orders concerning production of company charter records.

The British Civil Aviation Authority gave final approval Wednesday for Laker to operate a low-cost daily "skytrain" service between London and New York.

Warm Spell Enjoyed

OSLO (Reuter) Norwegians enjoyed the warmest winter day of the century Friday when the temperature reached 52.7 degrees. Early spring flowers bloomed and ski meets were cancelled because of lack of snow.

Eclipse Seen

BUENOS AIRES (AP) — Spectators witnessed an 82-percent eclipse of the sun here at noon Thursday. The temperature dropped and the light was similar to dusk as it occurred.

TRY THIS NEW PIPE "FREE" FOR 30 DAYS!

So different that it's patented by the CANADIAN GOVERNMENT patent number 800357

This top grade Mediterranean briar incorporates a sensational invention that contradicts every idea you've ever had about pipe smoking. It completely eliminates breaking-in. Tars, sludge, bite, and bitterness never reach your mouth. You get cleaner, cooler, tastier, moisture-free thoroughly enjoyable smoking. You can try it before you buy it.

E. A. Carey

Give it 30 days—

No cigarette, no cigar, nor any other pipe can give you the full rich flavor, aroma, deep down satisfaction, enjoyment, and peace of mind that you get from a Carey Pipe.

You may be a pipe smoker with a rack full of pipes and still searching for the ideal smoke, or perhaps you would like to switch to a pipe to cut down on cigarettes or expensive cigars.

The Carey Pipe may look like any ordinary pipe, but it's a lot different! In fact, there's nothing like it in the whole world. The Carey Pipe is made of the finest aged mediterranean briar—but, its big secret lies in the exclusive patented "MAGIC INCH," cleverly concealed in a bite proof nylon stem.

It's Not a Filter

The "Magic Inch" is not a filter that gets soggy and loaded with foul smelling goo. A soggy foul smelling filter transmits its stale foul odor into each successive puff of smoke, creating more problems than it solves.

It's Not a Trap

The "Magic Inch" is not a trap collecting moisture that gurgles with every draw. It is not a trap that must be cleaned after every smoke.

It's Almost Magic

Not my magic but NATURE'S OWN MAGIC. Warm winds pick up moisture by evaporation from the oceans, lakes, rivers, and streams, lift it high into the atmosphere where the cooler upper air squeezes it into drops of water that fall back to earth in its most perfect state of purity. Just as the colder upper air of the atmosphere causes rain, the cool air entering the "Magic Inch" chamber through the special louvers of the patented Carey stem, causes immediate condensation of the moisture in the smoke where it drops to the bottom of the chamber, is absorbed by the natural fiber sleeve of the "Magic Inch," and in turn, is evaporated into the outside air. No accumulation ever remains to form sludge or slugs of bitter tasting goo. The "Magic Inch" also mixes purifying oxygen with the smoke from the tobacco, in perfectly controlled proportions, cooling the smoke, eliminating all tongue bite, and creating MELLOWNESS, MILDNESS, and SWEETNESS that was never before enjoyed in pipe smoking.

Today, over one hundred and fifty thousand pipe smokers smoke Carey Pipes almost exclusively. They all got started by accepting my most unusual offer to test a Carey Pipe for 30 days, without any risk on their part whatsoever.

They were all granted the same option, an option which is yours also. After 30 days, if you agree that the Carey Pipe is the best smoke of your life, you may keep it; if you don't agree, whack it with a hammer and return the broken pieces to me. The trial has cost you nothing! How many businesses are that sure of their product?

Calgary Group Selling Interest in Cougars

By ERNIE FEDORUK
Times Staff

Ownership of the Victoria Cougars is changing hands.

Sale of the Western Canada Major Junior Hockey League team is all but finalized and needs only the approval of the league governors before it can be sealed and delivered.

Control of the team will pass from Island Sporting Enterprises Ltd., a group whose majority is Calgary-based, to four Victoria residents, including Cougars' general manager Eric Bishop.

The three local residents joining Bishop in the transaction haven't been identified.

Bishop refused comment other than to say: "That story has been floating around all season, hasn't it?"

Managing director Mitch Pechet, who relinquished coaching reins on Boxing Day after expressing disappointment in the team's performance for the first half of the schedule, also declined comment.

However, a reliable source indicated Friday that the sale "is all but wrapped up."

Fine details, including purchase price, have been settled.

A deposit towards purchase will be placed in trust, possibly within two weeks, and the sale will then await the pleasure of the governors before being finalized.

The governirs' decision will be made at a league meeting is Medicine Hat on Jan. 29 or 30. The meeting will be held in conjunction with the league's annual all-star game on Jan. 30.

In addition to Bishop and Pechet, the only Victoria-based shareholders, control of the Cougars is shared by Calgarians. They are Bud Milner, former Stampeder football player, Jim Seymour, Bob Standen, curler Jimmy Shields, Ed Owid and lawyer Harvey Ghitter.

All have one share except Owid and Ghitter, each of whom has a half share.

The shares will be absorbed equally by Bishop and his new partners.

The Calgary group purchased Cougars prior to the start of the 1970-71 season when Victoria campaigned in the B.C. Junior League.

The team was awarded a WCHL franchise prior to the start of last season.

Bast Leaves Cougars

Victoria Cougars have lost a defenceman, but it's the misplaced scoring punch that has prompted a shuffle of forward lines for tonight's Western Canada Hockey League game with New Westminster Bruins at Memorial Arena.

Missing is defenceman Cliff Bast. Obtained from Brandon Wheat Kings in November, Bast failed to turn up for practice Friday and is believed to have returned to his home in Yorkton, Sask.

General Manager Eric Bishop said Bast drove several players to a workout at Memorial Arena, then apparently returned to his lodging and packed all his personal belongings.

"We had a talk in the morning," said Bishop, "and Cliff gave no indication that anything was bothering him. As a matter of fact, I thought we had a heckuva good chat."

Bast's disappearance may force Bishop and co-coach Bob Briscoe to rely heavily on rookies Kim Clackson and Rick Lapointe along with Rick Williams and Cal Kitching.

Cougars' defence corps suffered a loss earlier this week when Ed Boucha picked up a knee injury. Boucha "is not likely" to dress for tonight's game, starting at 8:30.

Briscoe said a change in forward lines was prompted by the fact Cougars have scored only 10 goals in their last four games.

Elsewhere, the biggest smiles showed up is Saskatoon. The front office counted receipts from a standing-room-only crowd of 4,374 while the hometown Blades relished a 5-1 victory over Brandon Wheat Kings in a battle between the Eastern Division's top two teams.

In other games, Calgary Centennials and Winnipeg Jets played to a 4-4 tie in Winnipeg and Medicine Hat Tigers dumped Regina Pats 3-1 in Regina.

More than 500 fans stood in the aisles in the 3,800-seat arena as the Blades increased their division lead to three points over the second-place Wheat Kings. Don McLeod scored his 19th and 20th goals of the season for the Blades.

Don Ashbey salvaged the tie for Calgary when he intercepted a pass by Winnipeg's Mike Korney from behind the Winnipeg net and beat goalie Jim Foubister with five minutes remaining to play.

Medicine Hat' Boyd Anderson scored on a power play early in the second period to snap a 1-1 tie with Regina. Rick Uhrich of Regina and Paul Granchikoff of Medicine Hat scored in the first period and Tom Lysiak put the puck into an empty net with nine seconds remaining for the third Medicine Hat goal.

DOUG PEDEN - EDITOR

Scouts: Ranger Plan Is to Look 'Deeper'

After spending Christmas at home — "I really enjoyed that" — Jake Milford was off to the scouting wars again on Wednesday.

First stop was Ontario and the junior teams there; then Quebec, and also a couple of National Hockey League games. In 20 days or so, Jake should be home again. For how long? He's not sure. It's the busy time of the year for scouts.

Milford is employed by Emile Francis of the New York Rangers, and although he is listed as Scout: Pro-Am, Western Canada, his duties are not that specific. They are general and widespread.

For instance, besides scouting juniors, Milford is primarily concerned with the western professional teams of the NHL — Vancouver, Los Angeles, California, and the WHL. Perhaps a player, previously discarded, or overlooked, is playing well, and may be available via a draft, or a trade. The Rangers want a file on him. Francis wants to be kept up to date. Jake's opinion is a valued one.

Then it's somewhere else — almost anywhere, as the next three weeks.

"It won't be so bad in Ontario," said Milford, a former coach and general manager, mostly in the Ranger organization, at such places as Brandon, St. Paul and Omaha, "because when I get to Toronto, I will have a car and a driver, and I will be taken to all the various arenas. Besides, I know most of them. And I will make my headquarters in the Royal York."

"In Quebec, it might be different . . . I don't really know all the towns there . . . and the weather . . ."

'Bird-Dogs' Play Their Part Too

Still, the object is to find hockey players, draftable juniors, and perhaps a talent that has been overlooked.

This is the Ranger system. Every bit of information that can be secured on a player, is — and it depends on what all scouts, not just one, see in a player.

In regard to juniors, Milford is a back-up man for George in the west, and still hasn't seen all the teams in the WCJHL.

All finally answer to Francis, and submit their recommendations only after all reports have been co-ordinated.

NHL scouting doesn't end there, either. Tom Hookway, for example, is a Ranger scout here in town, and there are innumerable "bird-dogs" scattered across the country.

"I'll meet with some back east," said Milford, "and they'll give me a line on what to look for."

Rangers Can Wait for Heroes

"The real good ones, they stand out, eh?" Milford was saying of juniors, and fellows like Lanny McDonald and Tom Lysiak and "that big fellow who was here with Saskatoon on Saturday." If the name escaped him for the moment, the player's performance hadn't. Milford had recorded it, for posterity, and the Rangers.

What do scouts look for, besides the stars? Skating, desire, and natural ability are three prime requisites. But more.

"We like to look deeper, to what we consider might be the 12th or 13th draft pick," explained Milford.

"The good ones always go early, but then there are the players who develop late, or improve after their junior careers are over."

As a case in point, he pointed to a Cougar. His number: 17. "Now there's a fellow who hustles, tries all the time, is big, rugged, and plays hard. But right now, he isn't that good a skater."

A capsule report on a possible draftee? Perhaps. Because in a year or two Terry Ewasiuk could be a better skater; and the Rangers may be prepared to take that chance, draft him, and wait. They can afford to. Every junior isn't an instant hero in the NHL, and there isn't that much room at the top in the Ranger club either.

That's scouting, too, and why Jake is off again. And looking.

Front Line Gone, But Suns Survive

By The Associated Press

Phoenix Suns were in obvious trouble in the fourth period with their starting front line out of theo game on fouls.

"But we hung in there," said Phoenix coach Jerry Colangelo after Phoenix ripped Chicago Bulls 126-115 in the National Basketball Association Friday night.

In the night's other games, New York Knicks routed Buffalo Braves 129-106, Boston Celtics routed Atlanta Hawks 126-108, Kansas City-Omaha Kings tripped Detroit Pistons 103-100, Golden State Warriors walloped Seattle SuperSonics 128-96 and Portland Trail Blazers topped Philadelphia 76ers 135-102.

Phoenix and Chicago were tied 103 when Clem Haskins hit a 30-foot shot and Van Arsdale added a free throw. Phoenix then scored six straight points.

Bill Bradley scored a career-high 38 points to pace New York's victory. A 30-point performance by John Havlicek powered Boston over Atlanta. Sam Lacey hit for 28 points and grabbed 24 rebounds as Kansas City-Omaha downed Detroit.

Portland buried Philadelphia with a record 41-point third period.

The fourth quarter erupted in two separate fights.

Dale Schlueter, a 76er reserve centre, was punched and kicked and suffered a severe bruise on the right side of his face. All three, along with Blazer rookies La Rue Martin and Bob Davis, were ejected.

Curling Playdowns A Ma and Pa Affair

By JIM CRERAR
Times Staff

They may regard this weekend's South Island zone playdowns at the Victoria Curling Club as separate men's and women's events, but for at least 6 curlers they amount to a husband-wife mixed competition.

Helen Edwards, in charge of the 8-rink women's playoffs that opened Friday night, ran through the personnel and discovered eight woman competitors had husbands in the men's playdowns.

Only set of husband-wife skips she could find were Helen and Lyle Garraway of Racquet Club, both of whom survived into today's action.

Sharon Kaspick skips a Duncan women's entry and husband Vern is third on Glen Harper's rink. Judy and Gary Merrett both are thirds, Judy with the Kaspick women's foursome and Gary with Fred Duncan. Ralph and Jean Fulford throw second rocks, Ralph for Gwynn Hughes and Jean for Joan Hepburn.

There are two members of Madeline Toews' Playland rink with husbands in the playoffs. Madeline's husband, Jack, is second for Esquimalt's Lynol Mack while lead Stella Brice's husband, Les, skips a Playland quartet.

Men's play Friday night narrowed down to 24 rinks with the elimination of nine entries. Bob Oswald, Ed Kathol, Gord Moore, Bruce Stephen and Lloyd Larson, all of Victoria CC; Jack Goode and Trej Jones, both of Playland; Dave Haywood of Duncan and Sam Snobelen of Racquet Club.

It took an extra end for Garraway to oust Larson, 11-9, on Friday's final draw. Larson stole one on the 12th to square the match at 9-9 when Garraway was short with a last-rock draw, but Garraway bounced back for two on the 13th for the victory. The match, last to finish, broke up at 1:30 this morning.

Men's play continued today with draws at 8 a.m., 1:30, 4:30 and 10 p.m. to determine two of the four south representatives for the Island final in two weeks at the Racquet Club. The other two representatives will be decided in draws at noon and 6 p.m. Sunday.

There were several close women's matches, including a 9-6 victory by Duncan's Glenda Barrett over Mrs. Garraway which came when the Duncan rink stole three on the final end, and a 6-5 win Esquimalt's Phyllis Bird scored over the Kaspick foursome by counting two on the last end.

Two women's rinks were elliminated Friday night, leaving 6 foursomes to continue in today's draws at 11 a.m., 4:30 and 7:30 p.m. and Sundays draws at 9 a.m., noon and 6 p.m.

Ousted were Joyce Hepburn of Duncan, a 16-0 loser to Zel Moore of Esquimalt in a match conceded after seven ends, and Kaye Brooks of the host club, who lost an 8-7 heartbreaker to clubmate Claire Duncan.

One up coming home with last rock, the Brooks curlers lost it when a takeout was off target, removing one of their own rocks and leaving the Duncan foursome counting two.

Nanaimo Foursomes Ride on Inside Track

CAMPBELL RIVER — Nanaimo rinks skipped by Winston Allen and Norm Theissen scored convincing victories in the openning draw of the North Island men's curling playdowns Friday night.

Allen, behind 3-0 to Chuck Perry of Courtenay after three ends, bounced back for a 12-6 win while Theissen scored an 11-6 win over Bill Reed of Qualicum.

In other first-round matches, Gaye Enns of the host club defeated John Hartt of Port Alberni, 0-5, and Kelly Bloom of Courtenay edged Jack Collins of Qualicum, 8-6.

Allen met Enns for one of four North Island berths in the Vancouver Island finals. The winner of the Bloom-Theissen match plays the winner of McLeod-Mosoronchin for the second North Island spot.

Two more berths will be decided on the "B" side of the double-knockout event Sunday.

Collombin Leads Skiers

GARMISCH, West Germany (AP) — Roland Collombin of Switzerland started first and finished the winner here Saturday in the men's downhill race in the World Cup series.

The 21-year-old Collombin was clocked at 1:47.38 on the 3,140-meter Kreuzeck course with an 820-metre drop.

Patriot Offer Rejected By Paterno

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) — Joe Paterno has turned down a $1-million-plus offer to become coach-general manager of the National Football League's New England Patriots and will remain at Penn State University.

"I don't want to be a coach who just wins and loses football games," Paterno said in announcing that he would remain in college football. "Just winning and losing won't fulfil me."

Paterno, 46, said that at Penn State he felt part of something.

BAREFOOTED KICKER SIGNED BY ARGOS

TORONTO (CP) — Paul Large, a 6-foot-1, 255-pounder who specializes in kicking with his bare feet, has been signed by Toronto Argonauts of the Canadian Football League.

Large, a defensive tackle, has played as a free agent the last two seasons with Los Angeles Rams of the National Football League.

The 22-year-old from Arizona State, who punts as well as kicks field goals with his bare feet, played nine games with the Rams last season and was successful on 22 field goal attempts in his two years with Los Angeles. His longest was 52 yards.

GARY PLAYER'S GOLF CLASS:

Playing Easier Than Solving Problems

DEREK SANDERSON
... position uncertain

QUEBEC (CP) — The new World Hockey Association played its first All-Star game today and probably owners of clubs in the 12-team, two-division league would like to settle their committee-room problems as easily as the players can.

Regular league action resumes Sunday afternoon when Winnipeg Jets visit Minnesota Fighting Saints in St. Paul in that city's new 16,500-seat arena opened Jan. 1.

That game will be televised nationally in the United States by the Columbia Broadcasting System beginning at 1:50 p.m. eastern standard time.

Off-ice activities of the league are likely to continue in committee rooms and through numerous telephone conversations for the next two weeks.

The 12 team owners concluded day-long meetings Friday without a definite decision on three major topics.

They had not decided on a future home for the attendance-starved Ottawa Nationals or new owners for the league-operated New York Raiders.

Also still hanging was the future of centre Derek Sanderson, who left the National Hockey League Boston Bruins in favor of a five-year, $2.6-million contract with the WHA Philadelphia Blazers.

Sanderson, injured for most of the season, has not played many games for the Blazers. It was reported Friday night that the club and player were ready to disengage if a suitable settlement could be arranged.

Opinion differed here on how the Sanderson situation will eventually be settled.

It had been reported a likely solution to the Sanderson problem would be for him to move to the league-operated New York Raiders with the Philadelphia club getting $500,000 compensation.

The league would pick up the more than $2 million remaining in the contract.

Donald J. Regan, WHA general counsel, said Friday night Sanderson's problems with the Philadelphia Blazers could be "very close" to a solution.

Regan said a solution was not found at the general WHA meeting because the player's attorney, Bob Woolf, of Boston, was not there.

On another front, Nick Trbovich of Buffalo, co-owner of Ottawa Nationals, left little doubt Friday night that the World Hockey Association franchise will be moved to another city shortly because of poor attendance in the Canadian capital.

Trbovich said in an interview following the WHA all-star banquet he is not looking forward to the move but could see na way out of the situation. The Nationals have drawn fewer than 2,000 fans on average for each of their home games.

Earlier in the day, league president Gary Davidson stressed that it is up to the team's owners, not the league, to move or sell the club.

New York Raiders were taken over by the league several weeks ago after their owners stepped down. The team is being run by WHA executive vice-president James Browitt.

Davidson said he expects new owners "very soon" for the New York team.

While the owners were faced with these problems the athletes were busy on another front.

Lawyer Curt Leichner of Portland, Ore., met with players from each of the teams in an effort to form a WHA players association similar to the one in the NHL.

Less Static From Stands When Girls Handle Whistle

By JIM CRERAR
Times Staff

"You better not get any penalties," a peewee hockey player recently warned his team-mates before a game. "You might have to kiss the referee."

It's a pretty severe penalty, all right, if you happen to be 11 or 12. But older players might be inclined to spend more time in the cooler than on the ice and they'd have three very good reasons.

Sue Girton, 23, Janice Kelbough, 18 and Heather Clouston, 12, are hockey referees in Greater Victoria and they're proving every bit as competent as their male counterparts, even without the threat — or promise — of an embrace.

All three play hockey themselves in the Vancouver Island Girls' League. Sue is in her seventh season as a right winger with Carson Bulldozers. Janice plays defence for the same club. Heather is on defence for Esquimalt Lions.

Sue began refereeing to get in extra skating for hockey.

"The girls needed referees so I volunteered just for the skating time," she explained. Now she handles peewee boys' house league games as well as girls' contests.

Janice and Heather simply followed their fathers into officiating. Ken Kelbough is head referee at Juan de Fuca Arena while John Clouston holds a similar post at Esquimalt Sports Centre.

"My dad said there was no reason I couldn't write the referee's test," Janice said, "so I studied and studied and I passed it."

Heather must have done some studying too.

"They invited me to take the test and I got 84 per cent," she said.

Janice handles up to four games a week, mostly boys in the 7-to-12 age range at Juan de Fuca and Pearkes arenas. She also has officiated the occassional bantam (13 and 14) contests.

So far, the girls have had no problems with the players. As Heather explained:

"They ask if I'm a girl and I say yes and they just play."

None of the girls has had to break up a fight and they're not quite sure how they'd handle one. The odds are they'd handle it properly.

"There are a lot of girls playing hockey now and with the growing need for referees, there's no reason girls can't help out," Miss Girton said.

Janice's father agrees.

"We find we're getting less static from parents and coaches when the girls handle the games," Kelbough said. "I think it's because they're doing a good job."

In case any coaches or players think they can take advantage of the situation, they can forget it.

Three Trips Into Trees But It Was Fun for Dave

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "I'm back on my game," chortled Dave Stockton.

"I'm playing horrible but putting fantastic.

"That's the way I played a couple of years ago when I was winning tournaments. Last year I hit it down the middle and couldn't make a putt. This is much more fun. I get to see a lot more on the golf course."

Stockton, a 31-year-old former PGA champion and a long-time noted scrambler, made only one bogey despite three trips to the trees, erratic play in general and a couple of lucky bounces as he took sole control of the top spot Friday in the second round of the $135,000 Glen Campbell-Los Angeles open golf tournament.

Stockton needed only 28 strokes on the near-perfect greens at the 7,028-yard Riviera Country Club course in his second round 69 that gave him a 36 hole total of 136, six under par.

BOROS ONE BACK

That was one stroke better than "old folks" Julius Boros, a 52-year-old former U.S. Open title-holder who plodded placidly home with a 70—137.

At 138 were Australian David Graham, Vietnam war hero Buddy Allin and tour regular Don Bies. Allin had a 67, Bies and Graham 69.

Jack Nicklaus, the 1972 Player of the Year and pretourney favorite here, remained in a threatening position at 139, three strokes off the pace. Nicklaus had a second round 70. He was tied with Australian Bruce Devlin and host pro Mac Hunter.

Arnold Palmer managed a 71 for 146, but both British Open Champion Lee Trevino and England's Tony Jacklin failed to qualify for the final two rounds Saturday and Sunday.

It took a score of 147 or better to qualify and Trevino could do no better than 72—148. Jacklin also was at 148.

WILLIE MAYS PLANNING FOR HIS 21ST SEASON

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Outfielder Willie Mays of New York Mets says he's "sure I have it in me to play at least one more year."

Mays, now 41, will start his 21st major league baseball season when spring training begins.

Since San Francisco Giants traded him to the Mets last May, he has spent only a few weeks at his 18-room house in Atherton, an affluent suburb.

Mays took a bad spill, hurt his knee and had to sit out the final month of the season, but he said Dr. Robert Keran of Los Angeles has told him the knee will mend without surgery.

Vikettes Take Half-Time Hint

The second half made all the difference in Canada West University Athletic Association outings for Victoria's basketball teams Friday.

It worked out well for Vikettes but not for their male counterparts, the Vikings.

Leading University of Alberta Pandas 22-20 at the half, Vikettes were greeted by some "tough talking" from coach Mike Gallo. Vikettes came back to storm to a 48-27 victory.

Diana Brozuk, who counted 14 points for Vikettes in the Edmonton game, was outstanding from outside while Lorna McHattie, who scored eight points, controlled the inside zone.

The Vikings held Alberta's Golden Bears to a 35-35 deadlock at the half, but bowed 64-56 as the home team upset Victoria's attack by switching from a zone to man-to-man defence.

Timra Discovers Hockey Success

By The Canadian Press

After six successive defeats in exhibition and tournament play, Timra of Sweden finally found the winning formula Friday night and defeated Owen Sound Downtowners 7-1 in international hockey competition.

Bo Berggren's two goals and three assists enabled Sweden to conclude the 5-game Ontario international tournament with a win and four defeats.

In an exhibition game, Belleville Quintes of the Ontario Hockey Association Senior A series nipped Moscow Dynamos 2-1.

Prague Selects of Czechoslovakia have won the tournament with 10 points on an undefeated record in five games. Moscow and Galt Hornets share second place with six points followed by Kingston Aces and Sweden with two points each. Owen Sound is winless after four games.

The tournament between the three European clubs and three Ontario senior teams ends tonight with Kingston at Owen Sound and Moscow at Galt.

Sweden scored three unanswered goals in the first period and outscored Owen Sound 3-2 in the second. Jan-Erik Nilsson, Arne Lundstrom, Finn Lundstrom, Ake Soderberg and Ove Larsson got the other Sweden goals.

Tom Thurlby's goal late in the final period gave the Quintes the victory before 1,700 Belleville fans. Thurlby is the playing-coach for Kingston and was loaned to Belleville for the game.

Paul Grills got Belleville's other goal in the first period and Victor Shilov fired the tying goal early in the third.

Moscow outshot Belleville 42-18 and 25-4 in the final period, but Karl Bagnell was outstanding in goal for Belleville after replacing Ron Jury midway through the second period.

Pinder Stripped Of World Crown

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Panama's Enrique Pinder has lost his World Boxing Council world bantamweight title for not defending his crown within the required time.

The WBC stripped Pinder of his title Friday "for not meeting the rules" of battling the No. 1 contender within six months of winning the championship.

The announcement was made by WBC president Ramon Velazquez, who said that Agustin Senin of Spain and No. 1 contender Rodolfo Martinez of Spain would fight for the vacated crown within three months.

Pinder, also recognized as bantamweight king by the World Boxing Association, won the WBC title from Rafael Herrera of Mexico on July 29.

Pinder has until Jan. 29 to defend his title against Martinez, but has announced that he will fight fifth-ranked Romeo Amaya on Jan. 20. WBA rules require 15 days between title bouts.

The statement by Velazquez indicated that he never gave Pinder official notice that time was running out but he had announced prior to the July 29 fight against Herrera that Pinder would have six months to defend the title if he won.

Mike's Hooked on Ponies And It's Costing Plenty

By HARRY ATKINS

WINDSOR, Ont. (AP) — The sleek bay stood in his stall pawing the straw with his rear hoof as a tall, black-haired trainer entered with a bottle of antiseptic mouthwash in his hand.

"He's got a fungus on that leg," said Mike Kilkenny. "Believe it or not, mouthwash is the best thing to rub over it. Clears it right up."

Kilkenny, better known as a baseball pitcher with Cleveland Indians, spends his winters far from the fields of the American League.

He says he has invested his life's savings in a modest string of harness race horses; a venture for which he had virtually no experience or background.

"But he didn't like that, so he quit and started a furniture and appliance business," Kilkenny, 27, said with an easy grin. "A kid I used to know had a pony, that's about the extent of it."

HOOKED ON PONIES

Kilkenny admits he's hooked on the ponies and wants a farm.

"I'm looking for a farm in Ohio right now. It costs too much to stable your horses in somebody else's barn all year."

Kilkenny's entry into racing was a lark.

"We came to Windsor Raceway with a friend New Year's Eve to usher in 1971," said Kilkenny. "He owns a horse and I told him I could get a horse just as good as his and beat him."

HAS FIVE HORSES

Today, the southpaw owns five horses and the sulkies, harnesses and gear that go with them. He also employs a driver who doubles as trainer when Kilkenny resumes playing baseball.

"I'm in this right up to my neck and its costing me plenty," said Kilkenny. "I spent every cent I had, almost. But I don't owe any money. I paid cash for everything."

In addition to two horses in Windsor, he has three in the winter meet at Fairmount Park in St. Louis. He figures each horse must earn at least $6,000 a year for him to break even.

Expenses like that can put a big dent in the budget of a relief pitcher who was traded four times last season. Kilkenny was shuffled from Detroit to Oakland to San Diego to Cleveland.

But he compiled a creditable 4-1 record after his merry-go-round finally stopped on the shores of Lake Erie.

Kilkenny found it tough getting an off-season job this winter.

"Nobody will even talk to me around here, now that I'm with Cleveland," he said. "I couldn't even get any banquets. All they want is Tigers and I'm not a Tiger anymore."

Kilkenny talks little about baseball when he's around his horses. And when he does talk about the game, he quickly gets back to horses again.

"But, just like a horse, you have to run, keep in shape and be ready when the team needs you. It's a lot like life itself, isn't it?"

DALE FINISHES IN THIRD PLACE

SEBRING, Fla. (AP) — Jane Booth of Palm Beach Gardens successfully defended her championship in winning the 17th annual Harder Hall women's invitational golf tournament.

Lancy Smith of Snyder, N.C., took second place with a 76-74-74—224 while Dale Shaw of Victoria was third with a 74-75-77—226.

DALE SHAW

Ed's Pepper Fires Labs

Ed Hastings can hardly be called a placid netminder. He constantly barks orders to teammates and has been known to come out of his crease to check rival attackers while tending goal for Labatts in the Vancouver Island Hockey League.

It was Hastings who served up most of the pepper Friday as Labatts came around to upset league-leading Butler Brothers 5-0 at the Esquimalt Sports Centre.

Hastings made 22 stops, several of the eye-opening variety, for the shutout that dealt Butlers only their second setback in 4 games.

An upset of a minor nature also turned up in the second portion of the weekly doubleheader. Fifth-place University of Victoria Norsemen broke a tie with three goals in the final period to drop Canadian Forces Base Esquimalt Buccaneers 4-1.

Gord Palmer got Norsemen's attack rolling with a power-play goal in the second period, then added another in the third period. Bill Colquhoun and George Biggs also connected in the third while Moe Roy scored Buccaneers' goal to provide his mates with a 1-0, first-period lead.

Fennell Rink Knows How To Put 'Bite' in Curling

CURLING SCENE

By Jim Crerar

It's been a good season so far for Jim Fennell, possibly because curling is something he and his mates can really put their teeth into.

Fennell, you see, is a dentist, as are two other members of his rink that entered this weekend's South Island men's playdowns. So is the male member of his mixed rink that qualified for the Island finals next month at Port Alberni.

On the men's rink which represents Victoria Curling Club, Fennell and second Don Graham are dentists with the armed forces, both having moved to Victoria from the prairies. Lead Tom Erskine, formerly a service dentist at Royal Roads, has set up practice this year in Victoria.

Barry Kendell, second on Fennell's mixed rink that also includes lead Barb Haakonson and third Claire Duncan, is the fourth dentist in the crowd.

Fennell maintains it's strictly a coincidence that he's surrounded himself with dentists.

Coincidence or not, the rink came up with one of the most exciting first-round matches Thursday in the men's playdowns at Victoria CC. After drawing for two on the 12th to force an extra end, Fennell's gang lost to Duncan's Glen Harper on a last-rock takeout on the 13th.

Perhaps it was ironic justice, though, because in last month's mixed playdowns at Duncan, Fennell beat Harper on the last rock of an extra end.

Fennell, 24, has been curling since he was 10. He's a native of Winnipeg and three years ago, before moving to Victoria, he was voted the top skip at Winnipeg Thistle Club. His rink won the men's club championship the year before.

SUNDAY RACING PLAN HITS SNAG

CALGARY (CP) — The Calgary Exhibition and Stampede board found out Thursday that its decision to conduct Sunday horse racing with pari-mutuel betting was based on a court decision that has already been overturned on appeal.

Plans were announced last week to hold races July 8 and 15, during the annual stampede, based on a decision last August by Mr. Justice H. W. Riley of Alberta Supreme Court that said Section 4 of the Alberta Lord's Day Act was ultra vires of the Alberta legislature.

The decision, in a case involving merchants in the boardwalk in Edmonton remaining open Sundays, was overturned by the appellate division Nov. 9.

Stampede spokesmen said Thursday they were not aware of the successful appeal and Stampede president George Crawford said it now appears Sunday racing would not be possible.

Crawford said no firm plans for Sunday racing were presented to the stampede's board of directors.

"We really only instructed the Western Canada Racing Association (a wholly owned subsidiary of Calgary and Edmonton exhibition boards) to apply for Sunday dates so they would be available if and when we decided to go ahead."

Sparkling Start For Prep Squads

Six tasted their first action of the New Year, and all six turned in successes Friday.

Chris Trumpy picked off 20 rebounds and dropped 28 points to spark Oak Bay to a 69-42 decision over Revelstoke and a berth in tonight's final at the fourth annual Sasquatch invitational tournament at Mission.

Bays, fifth-ranked in the province, will meet fourth-rated Mission Roadrunners in the final. Mission advanced by topping Chilliwack 54-40 in Friday's other semi-final.

OVERTIME BATTLE

Mt. Doug was forced into overtime before clipping Sentinal Spartans in an exhibition at West Vancouver. Rams, who play Hillside in North Vancouver tonight, received sparkling efforts from Rick Jones (19 points) and Doug Mosher (18).

Gary Budd's 28-point spree sparked Mount View to a 60-50 victory over Point Grey Greyhounds while the Braves nipped Killarney Cougars 59-55 at Belmont.

Bill Collier scored 22 points for Point Grey, ahead 29-28 at the half.

Malcolm Moscrop scored seven of his 18 points in the final quarter to help Braves stay on top of Killarney. Jim Wallace added 14 points to Braves' cause while Gord Thompson scored 14 for Cougars.

Totems, building up a 25-11 lead at the half, defeated Oak Bay Independents 47-38 in an exhibition at Vic High.

Trailers Trip Braves To End Winless Skein

By The Canadian Press

But 3,444 Clipper fans finally went in a happy frame of mind Friday night after Baltimore stemmed a Boston rally to beat the Braves 6-4 in American Hockey League action.

Elsewhere, Rochester Americans blanked New Haven Nighthawks 4-0 as goaltender Lynn Zimmerman handled 25 shots. Virginia Red Wings toppled Hershey 7-3 to climb over the Bears into second in the west and Richmond Robins skated to a 1-1 tie with Providence Reds.

Marc Dufour, with two, Moe St. Jacques, Brian Murphy and Tom Cassidy pushed Baltimore into a 5-2 lead before the Braves rallied. Randy Miller clinched it in the final minute with Boston goalie Ross Brooks benched for an extra attacker.

Follmer Receives Trophy

LOS ANGELES (AP) — George Follmer of Arcadia, Calif., who set a precedent by winning driving championships on two auto racing circuits this year, has been named the winner of the Jerry Titus Trophy for 1972.

The 38-year-old former insurance executive received 173 of 195 votes, heading the all-American drivers for the year as selected by members of the American Auto Racing Writers' and Broadcasters' Association.

Follmer captured the Titus Trophy for the first time after becoming the first driver to win both the Can-Am Challenge Cup series for sports cars and the Trans-Am series for stock cars in road racing.

GARDENING
jack beastall

The true plantsman is always conscious of the effect of weather on his garden plants. Scorching sun, freezing cold or beating wind bring a conscious or sub-conscious response, sometimes little more than a passing thought as to how the plants are faring.

Average home gardeners are not so sensitive. Only when weather conditions affect the human body do they give a thought to the plants.

This fact is obvious both summer and winter. As soon as summer heat increases to a point of body discomfort we see sprinklers running everywhere, but as soon as the discomfort ends the sprinklers are forgotten.

The same with discomfort of winter cold. When its effect is noted on the body we think of the half-hardy and tender plants that should have been protected weeks before. Often we provide protection after damage has been done.

Because we live in an average climate that permits growing a large number of borderline plants, we look forward with some trepidation to winter losses.

However, considering the variety of climates from which our plants come, these losses are surprisingly small.

The large temperature range endured by some plants is as amazing as the small range endured by others. It seems to be closely linked with the temperature range in the plants' natrual habitat.

When searching semi-tropical regions for the plants likely to succeed in temperate gardens, plant hunters try for seeds or cuttings from specimens growing at high levels rather than the same species at sea level.

There is a popular belief that plants from warm climates become acclimatized in time when grown in areas of colder average temparatures, but there is considerable data that refutes this theory.

Amongst shrubs introduced into England in Turdor times were the Bay Laurel, White Jasmine, Sage-leaved Sunrose and Spanish-broom. Despite 400 years in the English climate these plants still retain their half-hardy character.

The Trumpet-flower, Strawberry-tree, Portugal-laurel, Mediterranean-heath and Passion-flower have been cultivated in temperate regions since the 17th century yet still are liable to servere injury by a prolonged period of frost.

The popular notion that plants adjust to the climate in which they are grown probably started when new introductions were treated as tender indoor plants and later were found capable of withstanding the local climate outdoors.

This was the case with the Hardy Palm, the Tulip-tree (Liriodendron), Magnolia, and Camellia. In fact, the Camellia is one of the hardiest plants in our gardens. Only the bloosoms are damaged by spring frosts.

Resistance to cold increases with the age of the plant. Many trees and shrubs that can withstand 30 degrees of frost (two degrees above zero F.) when mature are damaged or killed by 10 degrees of frost when young.

Why this should be has not been determined but it is analogous to human experience that early youth and old age are periods of greater susceptibility than the prime of life.

Winter damage seems to be associated with the amount of water in the tissues and cells of a plant, since our winters are characterized by mild wet periods our plants are highly charged with water.

At low temperatures the water crystalizes, expands, and ruptures both cells and tissues. Quite often the damage is not evident until late spring when food and water is no longer able to pass the damaged areas.

For this reason it is not advisable to discard any winter damaged plants until late spring when the actual extent of the damage will be obvious.

The sugar content of the sap within the cells of a plant seems to be another factor in resistance to cold, proteins becoming less liable to coagulation by freezing.

All hardy winter wheats have shown that tolerance of cold goes hand in hand with the amount of sugar present in the cell sap.

Other substances can exert the same protective action. Gummy substance (pentosans) protect apple shoots and cabbages, and amount to the essential difference between a summer and a winter lettuce. Acidity of cell sap has the same effect.

But we still have the problem of late spring frosts, so often fatal to plants that have withstood the rigorous of a severe winter.

Mild spells during the winter season are our major problem, decreasing frost resistance by causing stored food to change to growth food with the increase in temperature.

This, in turn, brings the plants out of natural dormancy only to suffer severe damage when temperatures again fall.

Despite all our efforts at erecting artificial protection it is apparent that factors beyond our control determine whether or not any given plant will survive our normal winters.

Prehistoric Sites Destroyed

By GRACE RAJNOVICH

TORONTO (CP) — Man has occupied Ontario for at least 10,000 years but the history of his past in the province may be arosed through the daily destruction of archeological sites, says the Ontario Archeological Society (OAS).

It blames the destruction on flood waters, earth-moving machinery and looting by pot-hunting citizens.

The OAS, a group of amateur and professional archeologists, has presented a brief to the provincial government calling for immediate legislation to protect such resources.es.

The OAS brief cites destruction by pot-hunters of sites from the Toronto area to Rainy River in northwest Ontario. It reported "heavy looting" of Sheguiandah on Manitoulin Island, the site of the earliest known occupation by man in Ontario.

SITES FLOODED

Dr. James V. Wright, chief archeologist for the National Museum of Man, has said that only in a few cases did archeological surveys "precede the flood waters" caused by Ontario's hydroelectric development.

But John Holland, a University of Toronto graduate student researching Canadian archeological legislation said the real culprits are laws that provide no basis for a program of public education.

"People are more aware of the European background of Canada because they can see ruins of old forts," he said. "They cannot see Indian sites under the ground. They are more concerned by what they can see than what they can't."

Many companies become sympathetic to archeological research when they are made aware of it. In one instance Ontario Hydro lowered the water level of the Montreal River near its dams at Cobalt so a student could survey sites along the shoreline. It also permitted excavation of two sites on its properties near Toronto.

CO-ORDINATE DATA

Ontario archeologists are urging the appointment of a provincial archeologist who would co-ordinate data so that the location of sites would be immediately available to developers and to establish a public educational program.

The OAS also wants changes in laws which at present allow Ontario Provincial Police to protect a site from pot-hunters and speedy developers only if the site is already designated as an archeological or historic site.

"Even then the OPP have no record of the sites which have been designated," Mr. Holland said.

Don MacLeod, archeologist for the ministry of natural resources and an OAS member, added that it takes miles of legislative red tape to have one site designated.

The OAS says artifacts must be thought of as a non-renewable resource belonging, not to the individual property-owner whose land may contain the site, but to all the people of Ontario.

Provincial archivist Donald McOuat said: "there are some reasonable suggestions in the OAS brief but the scheme could invite a lot of money. The government will have to look at how much it's going to cost."

The brief has been passed along to Jack McNie, minister of colleges and universities.

Meanwhile, the Archeological Survey of the

Meanwhile, the Archeological Survey of Canada, a branch of the National Museums of Canada, and the Ontario ministry of natural resources are trying to compile a list of known sites across Canada and it may be computerized by 1977.

The $100,000 Ontario study, directed by Mr. MacLeod and involving 28 archeologists, found more than 100 sites in provincial parks last summer.

Turpin's Ambition Must Be Abandoned

LONDON (AP) — Jackie Turpin has been ordered to give up his bid to emulate his uncle Randy Turpin, the late world middleweight boxing champion.

The final blow to Jackie Turpin's mercurial career was handed out by the British Boxing Board of Control. After studying medical reports, the board told the 23-year-old fighter he must quit the ring.

Less than 12 months ago, Turpin was voted the best young fighter of the year by British boxing writers. He went through 1971 with an unbeaten run of 11 fights, including 10 knockouts and was being compared with his late uncle, rated one of Britain's all-time boxing kings.

Then Turpin was floored 16 times when he lost to Spanish boxer Antonio Torres in April.

Later he underwent treatment and tests in hospital after reports said he blacked out while driving a car.

Recently he went back into training and applied to the board for permission to fight again. The application was turned down.

Many Lose Licence

EDMONTON (CP) — Nearly 4,000 motorists were suspended from driving under Alberta's demerit system in 1972, B. L. Hinman, a highways department administrator, said.

This was an increase of more than 100 per cent over the previous year.

In 1972, about 3,400 motorists received one-month suspensions, 450 lost their licences for three months, and 75 were handed with six-months suspensions.

Ask the Times: About driving all the way to Port Hardy, regimental crests and gardening clubs

Q. Is it possible to drive a car from Victoria to Port Hardy, B.C.? If it is, are the highways paved all the way? — F.C.H.

A. You can drive from Victoria to Port Hardy but a substantial part of the trip is over secondary gravel logging roads which can only be used after working hours.

The gravel road, which is quite passable, extends from a turnoff a few miles east of Gold River northerly for about 80 miles to Beaver Cove. From Beaver Cove to Port Hardy the road is paved.

You can reach Port Hardy via paved road only if you take the car ferry between Kelsey Bay and Beaver Cove.

Q. I would like to know what regimental crest is worn on the legion blazer to signify an air force chief technical squadron leader that was attached to the RAF in the Second World War at Leeming, Yorkshire in 6 Group of Bomber Command, in the Canadian Squadron's 405, 427 and 430: Also, where could I purchase these regimental crests, and any book which has information on regimental crests and medals of honor for all three branches of the armed forces?

Lastly, I would like to know where I could purchase the regimental yearbooks for the Patrician, printed for the Princess Patricia Canadian Light Infantry? The years I require are from 1961 to 1964. — H.D.

A. To find out which crest you should wear, write the Directorate of Information Services, National Defence Headquarters, Ottawa, Ont. K1A OK2, giving all the details. Once you know which crest you want, you can get it made at either J. R. Gaunt and Sons, 616 Legauchetiere West, Montreal, Que., or at Muir Cap and Regalia Ltd., 51 Simcoe St., Toronto, Ont.

However, a Royal Canadian Legion spokesman pointed out that no crest except the legion crest is ever worn on the legion blazer. There is probably no other way to get the Patrician for 1961 to 1964 if it isn't available through the adjutant at the Currie Barracks in Calgary.

Q. What can one put in a safe which is not opened very often to stop deterioration of the documents inside? — G.S.

A: A local safe company says the safe should be airtight and therefore no deterioration would occur. If the problem is moisture causing the paper to rot, packages of chemicals which keep the contained area dry may be purchased at safe companies.

Q. To whom should I write for an evaluation on a collection of autographs? Is Herr Backhaus the pianist alive and what is his address? What is the address of Yehudi Menuhin, violinist?

A. Write Mrs. Wanda M. Randall, executive secretary, Manuscript Society, 120 Prospect Ave., Princeton, New Jersey, U.S.A., about the autographs.

It is not known whether concert pianist Wilhelm Backhaus, born in Leipzig in 1884, is still alive. His address has been listed as 1 Via Mazzino, Lugano, Switzerland. Write to Yehudi Menuhin care of his agents, Kurt Weinhold, Columbia Artists Management, 165 West 57th Street, New York City, N.Y.

□

Q. Could you please tell me the address of the Anglo-American Families Association in Canada? C.L.

A. The Canadian Almanac and Directory, which lists all associations in Canada, does not list any such organization.

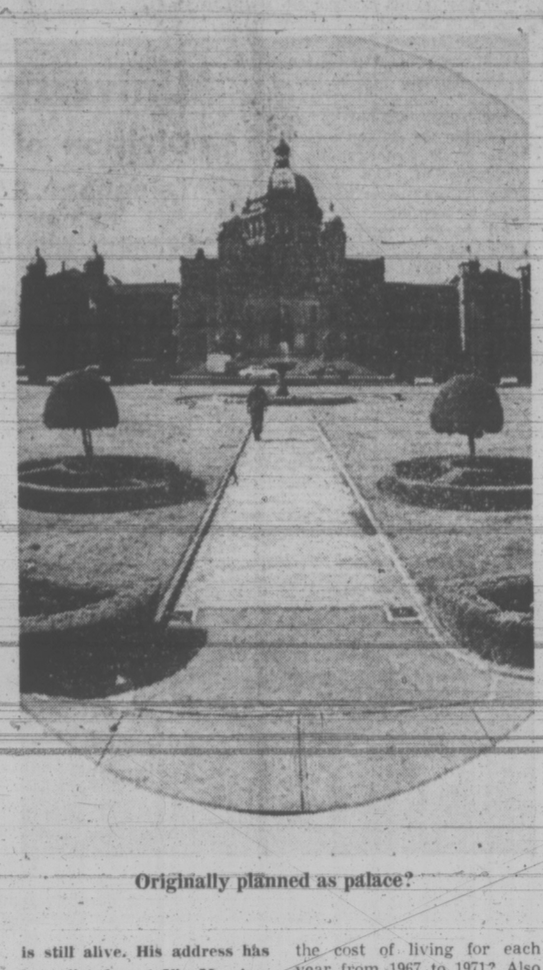
Q. What are the generally accepted Canada percentages on the rate of inflation and the cost of living for each year from 1967 to 1971? Also the figures for 1972 to date? S.L.

A. Rates of inflation are 4.1 per cent for 1967, 3.5 per cent in 1968, 4.7 per cent in 1969, 4.6 per cent in 1970, 3.4 per cent in 1971, and an estimated 4 per cent for 1972.

The Consumer Price Index, which gives the rise in the cost of living in Canada, is based on a figure of 100 for 1961. By 1967 the index was at 115.4, in 1968 at 120.1, in 1969 at 125.5, in 1970 at 129.7, in 1971 at 133.4 and in October 1972, at 142.

This gives a 4.1 per cent increase between 1967 and 1968, 4.5 per cent increase between 1968 and 1969, 3.3 per cent between 1969 and 1970, 2.8 per cent between 1970 and 1971, and 6.4 per cent between 1971 and October 1972.



Originally planned as palace?

Q. Is there a gardening club in Victoria that a person may join who has just begun gardening? K.B.

A. Most garden clubs welcome beginners. You could try either the Horticultural Society, care of Harry van Dyk at 479-6865, or the Vancouver Island Rock and Alpine Garden Society, care of C. A. Watson at 652-1176.

Q. Can a woman receive the Canada Pension who has never been employed but has been a home-maker and mother for 35 years? — L.L.

A. No. There is no provision in the Canada Pension scheme for housewives to receive pensions.

Q. Were the architect's plans for the Legislative Buildings originally intended for a palace in India, as I have heard, and the dome added later to make the structure resemble other capital buildings? — W.H.

A. Times files make no mention of the plans being originally intended for a palace. F. M. Rattenbury was chosen as architect from 67 who submitted plans for the buildings, which were dedicated in 1898. The dome was part of the original design.

Q. Is there any form of treatment, therapy or mental exercise that would assist one to retain or improve his memory, which tends to weaken due to advancing years? — E.C.C.

A. A local neuropsychologist says the answer is not simple. If an older person starts to lose his memory he should first visit a doctor to diagnose the problem. If it is a matter of simple aging, he said, one should try to develop some of the tricks of mnemonics to remember things (i.e., writing things down or establishing better association patterns). It is important to diagnose the problem since anxiety and depression are often a cause.

Q. My understanding is that for all monies manufactured at the mints, particularly in U.S., Canada and United Kingdom, the equivalent in gold must be behind this. Is this true? And if not, when and why was the system changed? In foreign countries and in underdeveloped places does the same rule apply? — G. C.

A. The gold standard, having gold backing for domestic currency, has been generally abandoned. Canada went off the gold standard in 1933, but even before that Canadian currency was backed only by 20 per cent of its worth in gold reserves. Britain went off the gold standard in 1931. United States currency was backed by 25 per cent its worth until 1968, when the United States went off the gold standard.

A shortage of gold was the major reason for abandoning the gold standard.

Flight Cost Cut Eyed

AMSTERDAM (Reuter) — KLM Royal Dutch Airlines said it and CP Air will drastically cut a number of regular flight fares on the North Atlantic route as of April.

Subject to approval from their respective governments, KLM said the airlines will introduce an advance purchase excursion plan.

CP Air will charge $94 from Montreal to Holland.

The cheapest KLM individual ticket, ranging from 4 to 45 days from Holland to New York, will cost about $175.

Passengers from New York to Holland will have to pay $30 more as the number of U.S. citizens going to Holland is larger than that of Dutch visitors to the U.S., KLM said.

BRYAN'S BEAT

VI—Change for Worse

By BRYAN HAY
Times Staff

On first thought, it's one heck of a good idea . . . but the proof of the pudding — as the old adage has it — is in the eating.

And, this particular dish has a very stodgy, undercooked taste which settles rather uneasily on the stomach.

Too bad. Because it could be a very meaty treat.

If you're still with me, I guess the time has come to quit going around in circles and come to the point of what in blue blazes I'm talking about.

Quite simple. The changeover which took place at the first of the year in CJVI's so-called music format. The big jump to country and western from musak.

When word first reached me of the policy switch I was delighted. At last, I thought, a notch on the dial in this town where I could peg my radios and be sure of checking out something that was worthwhile rather than bleah.

BACK HOME

After two weeks, the needle on the car radio is now back home much of the time on 'LG and we're solidly on the FM band again at home.

What VI has done is traded one chunk of bleah programming for another. If it's possible to foul up a format, our local stations are the ones to foul it up.

JUNK

Whoever is programming the junk being foised on an unsuspecting public as country and western music from 900 on the radio dial obviously hasn't heard any new releases in that genre since the tunes came on 10-inch platters, spun at 78 rpm and were referred to disparagingly as hillbilly music and considered suitable only for the great unwashed in the Bible and Corn belts.

If VI wanted to be honest, it should rejig its new slogans so that it promotes the fact that its playing "country classics" much of the time.

DEAD

In case the powers-that-be at VI, tucked away in insularity on this island city far away from the pulsebeat of the world hadn't realized it, I'd like to point out that Jim Reeves, Patsy Cline and Johnny Horton are all dead — and what's more died more than 20 years ago.

Why, therefore, should we be constantly barraged with tracks they cut about the time Patti Page was twirling around to the Tennessee Waltz?

BURIED

Furthermore, Eddie Arnold has been as good as dead for the past thirty or so years.

I will concede one thing, however, Harper Valley PTA is one blockbuster of a song — at least it was in 1968 . . . and should have graduated to the junkpile a good few years ago.

And, fellas, despite what the promotion men might have told you — present-day C & W doesn't begin and end with Charley Pride . . . least of all with Kiss An Angel Good-morning.

CANADIAN

Finally: That all-important Canadian content. There have been other country tunes cut here besides Snowbird and there are more performers than Anne Murray.

What about Stomping Tom, Stevedore Steve and Catherine McKinnon, to name just three?

Despite the way it looks, I write this more in sorrow than in anger — I really dig country music (especially at milking time and when shovelling out the barn) and feel that a solid C & W station has a valid place in the community of the airwaves.

DIFFICULT

But so far, a solid C & W station is something we don't have. I realize that any new policy is a difficult trip to get on . . . but there have been others take this trip before, and until you find your feet, might it not be an idea to format yourselves a little tightly on some of the nation-wide country charts?

Otherwise, VI country is doomed to being just another Victoria radio foul-up.

Brigitte Still With Us After 16 Hectic Years

By PIERRE VIANSSON

PARIS — In any case, this film has one advantage — it will help rid us forever of that accursed starlet." Thus went the prophetic, peremptory decree of a Paris morning paper's film reviewer who deplored Roger Vadim's And God Created Woman, Brigitte Bardot's first hit.

Sixteen years have rolled by since then and the "accursed starlet" is still with us. And the director of her next film, tentatively and awkwardly entitled And If Don Juan Were a Woman?, is none other than Vadim himself.

The same Vadim, of whom another illustrious critic, also still with us, wrote in the weekly literary review of the same Paris daily: "What are we to think of a husband, for all that he works in the cinema, who so complacently exposes to public view his wife's almost totally nude body for an entire hour and a half?"

Today that critic would hardly blink an eye; in a decade and a half we've come farther than we ever got between Moliere's time and 1956.

Brigitte herself is farther along the road: 56 films, some of them good, some not. Hit records. Television shows at French television's prime time of prime times, New Year's Eve. Fashion crazes — and every one she's launched she's survived.

Money, lots: $400,000 a film. Kudos. Marguerite Duras, Francois Mauriac, Simone de Beauvoir, Gilbert Cesbron, Edgar Morin, Francois Nourissier, Edmonde Charles-Roux, all in their turn have tackled the "Bardot case."

* * *

The French mint has struck a medal bearing her image. And when she was 25, she was immortalized in that Panthcon of popular heroics, the Petit Larousse.

Her plywood silhouette adorned the Vatican pavillion at the Brussels World's Fair, but that was to illustrate Sin. She's twice presided over Union des Artistes galas, and won prizes and ticker-tape welcomes from Rio to New York, from Munich to London.

In London in 1963 while she ws making Une Ravissante Idiote with Anthony Perkins, peaceful Hampstead was invaded by a crowd chanting "We want B.B.!" Production had to stop and the company retired to Paris, where the Hampstead locale was reconstructed in a studio.

If her private life has been a windfall for gossip columnists and indiscreet news photographers, to her it hasn't always seemed quite so gratifying, and several times she's even thought of leaving it behind forever.

BARDOT

As for husbands, Jacques Charrier and Gunther Sachs followed Vadim. There have been a number of companions — Sacha Distel, Jean-Louis Trintignant, Raf Vallone, Samy Frey — who've gone on to achieve renown on their own, and a host of others who've sunk back into obscurity.

All this has been played out in the glare of photographers' flashbulbs and television lights: among all the brouhaha of press conferences, interviews, even courtrooms. As one of her chroniclers, Yves Salgues, puts it, she hasn't so much a private as a public life.

* * *

Her homes are constantly besieged fortresses, including that very bourgeois apartment in the Avenue Paul Doumer, near the Trocadero; her thatched house in Bazoches, in the Yvelines countryside outside Paris; but above all her celebrated Madrague, deep in Les Canebiers Bay near Saint Tropez.

And, finally, there are her enthusiasms: for lost dogs, for the deer in the Landes, for suffering livestock in the slaughterhouses.

But above and beyond all that and herself — despite herself — there is the Myth.

The Myth, says sociologist Edgar Morin, is summed up very simply in an ensemble of behaviors and imaginary situations. The actress becomes a star when she lets her personality take over, all the while benefiting from that personality on the mythical level. Yet the personality is itself also profoundly marked by the woman.

Brigitte Bardot at one point so completely personified her myth that the public knew more about the way she dressed, did her hair (or didn't do it), let herself go, got married and divorced — in a word, the way she lived — than they knew about her film roles.

The beehive hairdo of the fifties — in France they called it the "choucroute," the "sauerKraut" — that was Bardot. She was the cover girl of Jardin des Modes. Ballerina skirts checked gingham dresses, duffle coats, tee shirts: they were all Bardot.

The sleeveless "debardeur" sweater like a man's undershirt, the funny little Jules and Jim cap, the hippy bandeau, the Bonnie and Clyde beret — they were all Bardot before they were anybody else.

The cool transgressions of traditional codes, the melange of childhood and eroticism, of innocence and perversity — all Bardot.

"If people don't like me, I become very plain," she confides before the microphones and the cameras in her drawling, shrill little voice, a little vulgar and a little posh.

* * *

Anyone today who's 20 or 25, even 30, finds it hard to imagine the shock this feminine Orpheus, as Michel Cournot called her, provoked in their elders 15 years ago. With her 32-carat smile, her good-time laugh, her mad appetite for life, her impudence and her acid wit, she scandalized a few, seduced others, and left nobody indifferent. Her physique, her repartee, but above all the insolent freedom of the way she looked and the way she acted were passionately debated.

But now that symbol, that provocative star, is 38 years old. "She's aged remarkably," says Vadim. But he's 44 himself. From the time Bardot was 30, Marguerrite Duras noticed a "poignant little sharpening of the mouth and eyes which wasn't there yesterday." She wondered: "Is this the end of that marvellous morning?"

Who is Bardot then, to the children of May '68 whose way towards airy casualness, zest for life, abandonment of constraints she unknowingly paved? Just Daddy's favorite movie star?

Condemned never to grow old, she's no longer the national monument she used to be. Does the myth Vadim is trying to revive in this 180th movie attempt at Don Juan — but the cinema's first attemp at a Don Juanita — belong to the past?

Yet when you think of the unexpected and unique return to the limelight of such new finds of today's youth as Humphrey Bogart or Marlene Dietrich, you feel that maybe there's hope after all, maybe even a future.

THE GETAWAY

Making a Killing on Killing

A Film Review
By WAYNE HARDING

Of course, the commercial exploitation of violence is something of a tradition in the cinema. Almost from the beginning, filmmakers recognized how dearly audiences love celluloid brutality and what financial rewards lie in that affection. The Western and the Epic are film forms that sprang and bloomed on that projected blood lust. The movie house became the neighborhood Roman circus.

In the old days the violence of the movies was supposedly justified by morality. There were good guys and bad guys

Now we are more sophisticated. The arty psychological theories have filtered down to the circus mob and it is widely understood that the differences between good and evil are pretty academic and what really counts is technique.

It's not what you say but how you say it, Professor Higgins would have reminded film producers anxious to continue the time-honored practice of making money by fantasizing and packaging beatings and killings.

Sam Peckinpah is a filmmaker who doesn't need to be coached in this area. In his earlier films, The Wild Bunch and Straw Dogs, he clearly refused to be encumbered by the pretence of a moral framework in which to ship his violent goods — or, for that matter, any evident artistic destination.

He continues his mission in The Getaway. When the final rough tally came in, 12 human beings had lost their lives in a colorful array of shootings, most of them executed by a very cool Steve McQueen — a guy as regular and uncomplicated as your barber.

And while we're doing the body count, we should note a suicide hanging which is actully made to seem, if not funny, certainly light — all as a result of masterful techniques.

The film is certainly well done. McQueen is tough, boyish, witty — whatever the director or circumstances call for. Ali McGraw is cunning combination of sorority sister and gun moll. The supporting cast is well schooled.

The frames flash by in perfect patterns and true color. Voices from one sequence subtley drift into the frames of another (it's one of those clever new devices that is all the rage.)

But what is all this cleverness for? Why are these obviously competent technicians in the background employed? For what are these actors' talents used?

To comment on the human condition or perhaps give a little insight into the development of a man's personality?

By ANNE McDOUGALL

Dorothy Livesay and George Johnston have to be two of Canada's most delightful poets. I thought at first I could compare and contrast their volumes of collected works. It isn't possible or if possible doesn't seem a good idea. They are too individual and each too strong in his/her own right to benefit from that sort of reviewing.

Just one thing: now that Margaret Atwood has written that landmark book "Survival," I must say that for me these two of an earlier generation show little evidence in their attitudes to life of the clipped wings she so despairingly calls

COLLECTED POEMS: The Two Seasons, by Dorothy Livesay. McGraw-Hill. $6.50.

HAPPY ENOUGH, by George Johnston. Oxford University Press. $2.95.

Canadian. They fly — Dorothy Livesay as high as the meadowlarks that rise in dizzy song from the fields by the University of Victoria where she works; George Johnston at least as high as the cruising auk can go.

It is good to have their poetry all together like this, both put out in attractive paper editions. Ladies first:—

This is Dorothy Livesay's own collection of her works. Written over nearly 50 years, they are the poems of a woman who still and always sees herself as a young girl in love. And it's true: you can pick a poem from the first section (Green Pitcher, 1926-28) and another from the last (Plainsongs, 1968-71) and the quality of youthful eagerness and yearnings stamps them both.

It has been said that Canada will be grown-up when someone writes a real love story. Perhaps Dorothy Livesay has done this. She hurtles through these years in constant love with something, with life, with men, with causes, children, grandchildren, the Prairie where she was born.

In many fields of thought she is ahead of her time. Long before Woman's Lib, Dorothy Livesay was aware of and articulating the problem of woman creative, woman creating. "The Three Emily's" (written about 1948) is her cry, as a wife and mother, to three women (Emily Dickinson, Emily Bronte and Emily Carr) who had the freedom to write and paint that she partly longed for, but who did it alone. In "Other" she examines her own restless spirit with characteristic honesty:—

> Tell me a time
> I have not loved
> Men prefer an island.

Dorothy Livesay has lived and worked in cities all across Canada, the U.S. and overseas. She writes from experience. In "The Thirties" she tells of the depression, men without jobs, an unjust society.

Dotted all through the book are poems for her friends, sympathetic, written almost as if she were in their shoes. There's a sharp wit in poems like "United Nations":—

> In the top-floor restaurant
> We damn the bloody French
> And yet they pull it off, no jokes; > forever finding life in art
> And art in artichokes.

A later section, containing a poem called "Zambia," breaks into a sort of drum roll and gives an amazing sound of African rhythm and speech.

Self-awareness is probably her most pronounced trait. She is driven to express her feelings, you may say too freely, too self-centredly. The warmth is there and the courage. In 1926 she wrote:

> Unless I am smothered—
> Wings beaten—
> I shall laugh still.

And she does.

Like the Livesay volume, this contains all of George Johnston's poetry. Two of the sections, "The Cruising Auk" and "Home Free," have been published before but for some years have been out of print. The new section "Happy Enough" opens the book with 32 new poems.

There are a number of doors into George Johnston's world. The most original, perhaps, is a device he uses in the earlier poems. Whether for his children or his own reference, he has invented a whole cast of characters who pop in and out of the poetry in easy familiarity.

The first time you encounter Mr. Murple, Sadie, Edward or Aunt Beleek (to name a few) you feel you have met them before. By the time you have read all George Johnston's poems these people have become as real as your neighbors, your family, yourself.

It has been called a gift for story telling, woven into poetry. Johnston shies away from the abstract. Whenever he can he pegs an emotion with a concrete happening. The whole of winter emerges in "Ice at Last":

> While Mr. Murple, in a cloud of frost
> Centripetal

"The Hero's Kitchen" takes you home:

> A seal of holiness descends
> Upon the kitchen floor;
> Mrs. Belaney and her friends
> Knit and discuss the war.

And "Bliss":

> Bliss is nice, but a little bit will do:
> Edward has had too much, and his slut has too:
> Only to see the hoof-marks in their eyes

DOROTHY LIVESAY
. . . restless spirit

"Under the Trees," it hurts. Bittersweet comedy it has been called. The humor usually wins out. If you talk to someone else who knows Mr. Murple, it's like chuckling over Leacock. Or maybe Thurber.

The middle section contains poems about love, nature, country life as in the marvellous "Honey." There are occasionally poems about such Ottawa phenomena as royal commissions, biculturalism, Remembrance Day. In a vivid way Johnston paints in the grey November sky of Confederation Square. He also brings to life some of the sweeter corners of the capital, not the easiest city to describe. In "The Lily Pond:—

> Down at the bottom of Third Avenue
> Ottawa has a lily-pond on view.
> Neat little stone-edged pond, just big enough

And The Siberian Olive Tree:

> Walking upwind under Bronson Bridge
> In winter time, thinking wintry thoughts,
> I look through at a Siberian olive tree
> That has been planted alongside the canal.

In the newest poems, George Johnston seems to have deliberately stepped aside from the hurly-burly of college life and young-family rearing. Instead of writing for his children he now writes about them, most beautifully. Also about friends, like F. H. Underhill. His lines are even shorter than before; he says more in less.

One of the poems, "Faroese Impressions," describes the Faroe Islands, a part of the world Johnston has studied in his work on Old Norse and whose manuscripts, in Faroese, he is now translating into English.

George Johnston was born in Hamilton. For some years he has been Professor of English at Carleton University, Ottawa. Just as you find some of the breeze and breadth of the West in Dorothy Livesay, there is a lot of the close, low skyline, barn warmth of the East in George Johnston.

Ode to Business From Our Past

By PAT BARCLAY

The business community in Canada has been given a hard time of it lately. First there was Gustavus Myers, who raked its forbears roughly over the coals in his interminable but devastating History of Canadian Wealth.

Then there was ecologist James Woodford, who wrote Violated Vision, the Rape of Canada's North, and castigated both business and government for short-term thinking and irresponsibility.

And let's not forget Jerry Goodis, the Toronto advertiring man who aired some disquieting suspicions about business influence on the media in Have I Ever Lied to You Before?

Add to these the current burning or at least smouldering questions of economic nationalism, and you have an atmosphere which is bound to create problems for any thoughtful businessman who seeks to remain either on the fence or off the defensive.

But wait! To the rescue comes the University of Toronto Press, brandishing a reissue of Alan Sullivan's novel The Rapids. First published in 1922, The Rapids is a sort of prose hymn to the "heroic age of Canadian enterprise."

Few, if any, works in our literature contain anything like Sullivan's unabashed admiration for the inspired entrepreneur: it is not too much to say that The Rapids is the story of a businessman beatified.

Its hero, Robert Fisher Clark, is really a stand-in for Francis H. Clergue, the daring U.S. developer who founded Algoma Steel. (And Algoma Steel was only one of Clergue's many interlocking companies, whose total capitalization reached $147-million in 1902, making him the driving force behind the largest industial development under single control in Canadian history.)

For a time, Alan Sullivan was Clergue's chief engineer at the works in Saut St. Marie. He himself described The Rapids, his third novel, as "a tribute to a man under whom I worked and for whom I have always had the greatest admiration." The ingenuous Sullivan even placed a doggedly loyal, quietly competent young engineer, Jim Belding, at the head of his cast of secondary characters.

This much divulged, there seems no point in my attempting to deny that The Rapids reads better as social history than as fiction. Even the book jacket, with masterful euphemism, describes it as "Not a distinguished work of fiction." Michael Bliss of the University of Toronto, who wrote the able and penetrating introduction to the new edition, comes right out and calls it "a bad novel." With friends like these, what writer needs a hostile reviewer?

And yet, for all its simple-minded enthusiasm and skirting of moral issues, The Rapids contains some exciting and memorable scenes. There is the fight between Fisette, the half-breed prospector who discovers iron ore, and Manson, chief constable and town pessimist, whose curiosity and awakened greed surge out of control.

There is the visit by the four indistinguishable Philadelphia financiers, whom Clark leads on an unexpectedly funny chase through the Northern Ontario bush. There is the odd idyllic moment when a character is permitted simply to loaf about, fishing or luxuriating idly in the peace and beauty of the land; and one brief, gripping scene in which the lovelorn Belding shoots the formidable rapids in a canoe.

Then there are the graphic descriptions of Clark's over-expansion, the crash, and and the ensuing riots, all of which Sullivan handles with impressive facility. Most effective of all is the book's atmosphere of gathering momentum, as Clark barrels on to his final and undeserved defeat. Then suddenly, as if he had lost interest in the whole undertaking, Sullivan goes limp. The book ends badly, on a note of breathless fortitude.

Part of the problem is Elsie, the girl in both Clark's and Belding's life. Elsie, when she is not being "imaginative," "rapturous," or "tremulous," is just plain silly. (Poor thing, when she meets Belding for the first time it strikes him that "she was meant to be some man's comrade.") Too many other characters are equally flat and unpromising, as if they were thrown in by Sullivan merely to flesh out his hero's career.

Unlike Frederick Philip Grove's The Master of the Mill, which spans three generations of mill-owners from 1888-1938, The Rapids makes little attempt to tackle the moral issues inherent in the building of an empire. To Sullivan, Clark is a genuine "prophet in the wilderness." Those whose lives are changed by him come to marvel at, rather than regret, the results.

Against his mythic hero Sullivan pits a group of pussyfooting directors and the stock market jungle, the point being, apparently, to demonstrate that while some Americans may possess the heart of a lion, others more nearly resemble the wolf. The Canadians, of course, are nearly all represented as sheep.

As Michael Bliss points out in his introduction, the "stunning irony" of the novel is that one of Canada's greatest entrepreneurial heroes was really an American. He might have added that, in typical Canadian style, Sullivan's new publishers have had The Rapids printed in the U.S.A.

THE RAPIDS, by Alan Sullivan. University of Toronto Press. $3.95.

PETER MURRAY—EDITOR

NORMAN LIDSTER

A POIGNANT AUTOBIOGRAPHY

Enjoying What Life Can Offer

By ART STOTT

Before he can assess Norman Lidster's book a reader has to overcome his incredulity that the book was produced at all. Norman Lidster is blind. A progressively crippling ailment has left his body virtually immobile, with decreasing use of his hands alone. A less determined man, faced with these handicaps, could have given up, become a vegetable.

NO TIME FOR WHY, by Norman Lidster. $4.

Norman Lidster has the determination to remain a participant in the world of the living, the quiet courage and the lively intelligence to clamber over towering obstacles. Also, he has friends, won and retained by a constant recognition of their worth.

The long-time patient of Mount St. Mary and familiar sight on Victoria streets and at Victoria events, on his almost horizontal wheelchair, is not the only writer who has surmounted seemingly impossible barriers to tell his story. In recent years, Christy Brown has appeared in print to present the picture of a hopelessly incapacitated poor Irish boy in "Down All the Days:"

"No Time for Why" is not comparable with Brown's story. It reaches neither the poetic pinnacles nor splashes down into the mire. Norman Lidster is conventional, with a difference. The difference, to this reader at least, lies in his ability to find excitemment in the ordinary — a very genuine and perceptive stimulation drawn from mental — and perhaps spiritual — contact with members of the human family, the attractions of nature so casually noticed by healthy people with normal faculties, and an absorbing interest both in the physical world around him and the trends of thought, politics, religion and behavior.

He "sees" with the distilled clarity of the blind, absorbing sights through the eyes and descriptions of others.

He recognizes his dependence on people, their service in wheeling him about, particularly to Beacon Hill, the seashore and the Outer Wharf, where he can retain his vital interests in ships and their mysteries. Because of his dependence, he is careful of friendship, attentive to the mood and sensitivities of those who have made it possible for him to return to life.

More than two score individuals helped him in the preparation of his book, a work of eight years' labor created in the author's mind and dictated to a tape recorder.

The story is poignant despite the restraint with which it is told. Norman Lidster enjoyed a normal boyhood in New Westminster until stricken by progressively destructive rheumatoid arthritis and declining sight in his high school years. He has known spiritual darkness and has emerged from it as he cannot emerge from the darkness of blindness.

Great is his appreciation for all who have helped him, nurses, doctors, friends and, particularly, the staunch personalities of those who have enabled him to enjoy the services of the Canadian National Institute for the Blind. Music by the Victoria Symphony and other organizations, transports him.

Sturdy in heart, inquisitive in mind, grateful for living, he expresses a message for his more fortunate fellow citizens. By example he tells them to enjoy what life has to offer, to keep participating in it, and to watch and to listen a little more attentively for a fuller enjoyment of benefactions all may share.

Sense, Nonsense on Schools

By VIRGINIA SMITH

This book offers the reader some sense and much nonsense. The sense that one discovers reveals the author to be well-schooled in his subject, the teaching of poetry.

SENSE OR NONSENSE: Contemporary Education at the Crossroads, by Bert Case Diltz. McClelland and Stewart. $7.95.

While analysing this poetry he institutes a Socratic dialogue between student and teacher to exemplify how to attack a poem.

Dr. Diltz makes some sense about the effect that the social sciences have had on education, and gives excellent examples of the non-language of the sociologist: "directional goals," "objective consequences," "testable hypotheses," and "theoretical orientation."

The sociologist and the psychologist, beside corrupting language, have interfered with the entire educational system, making the teacher a social worker and the student part of some "group" or some "homogenized whole."

In other words, both the teacher and the student incorporate a method that has little to do with the creative, imagination, intuition or the study of literature.

Diltz does not approve of "grouping by ability because it does not give any academic advantage." He condemns the concept of "an intellectual elite" because he feels that it succeeds only when it "commands the respect of the masses." He would abolish remedial reading because it dilutes great literature and destroys it.

"The teacher's proper function is not to oversimplify experience or to reduce the truth to the understanding of the feeblest intellect . . . that denies the existence of the creative instinct." The student will not benefit from inferior quality nor will his creative imagination respond to a substitute for real literature.

Another aspect of Diltz's sensible approach to education is his observations about teachers. He feels the teacher is "already 'supervised to death' by people who read books on education written by people lacking experience in actual teaching." When the high school teacher has the same freedom as the college teacher, much will be gained in education. The college teacher learns to teach in the classroom, not at a College of Education.

Would Diltz institute liberal arts as a substitute for methods courses, and thus eliminate the need for education schools? Probably not, although he is unhappy with the system as it is.

As for the nonsense, there is a lot of it. The poems he analyses for us tend to have one interpretation, his. He says, "Unless the meaning can be verified by references to all the facts of the poem, it is not the meaning of the poem." Archibald MacLeish refutes this: "A poem should not mean but be," a much more creative and open-ended approach to a poem.

Diltz continues with his own version of gobbledygook: a poem that is good has a vertical plane and, a poem that is bad has a horizontal plane. He takes two poems entitled "The Scarecrow." The inferior poem by Michael Franklin illustrates "a poem on a horizontal plane of feeble thought;" whereas the superior poem, by Walter de la Mare "is built in a vertical pattern of thinking, feeling and imagining." With these imagined distuctions, he would have us dissect literature, disassembling all of its parts, much like a machine, in order to discover how it functions.

Another example of nonsense is Diltz's ideas about freedom. His xenophobic fear of contamination by other educational systems, including the American, Russian, and Chinese, indicates an insular view of Canadian education. "It is time to reassert some Canadian nationalism in the educational system and reunite learning with life," he says.

A confidence in Canada's intellectual capacity to discern the quality that exists in education, both here and abroad, would enable educators to select that which best suited Canadian education. Such an assurance would prove that Canadian identity will not crumble if Canada exposes itself to educational ideas from anywhere.

How did this book get published in the first place? It is a non-book, it has no focus, no thesis, and little sense. Perhaps McClelland and Stewart owed Dr. Diltz something for his "some 20 textbooks in the field of English," besides a collection of original poems and autobiographical sketches.

West Coast Sagas

By TORCHY ANDERSON

Few coastlines in the world offer more magificence and menace than that of British Columbia. Here are two books that emphasize both aspects.

It is a coastline of deep inlets guarded by formidable mountains. It has sandy coves of inviting, peaceful beauty. It has headlands toothed with rocks hungry for victims. On its beaches rollers crash as if they had hurried all the way from Japan.

SHIPWRECK!, by T. W. Paterson. $1.50.

BARKLEY SOUND, by R. Bruce Scott. $5.

In his little book Tom Paterson has dug up accounts of coastal wrecks. There was the American passenger ship Clallan, a tragic sinking that took many lives almost within sight of watchers on the beaches of Oak Bay.

There was the sickening speed of the sinking of the little Iroquois within a few hundred yards of the Sidney wharf. The ship, which made the regular rounds of the Gulf Islands with freight and tourists, left a number drowned and a deckload of baled hay afloat.

R. Bruce Scott, for many years with the Bamfield station of the Pacific cable, has written a splendidly illustrated, deeply researched book which is at once a monument to the southern part of the B.C. coast and an eloquent advocacy for the development of the Pacific Rim Park.

The book centres on Barkley Sound, a vast indentation in the formidable coast line that ends in Alberni Inlet and the industrial city at its head.

I cannot imagine any better fellow traveller than this book for those who explore this territory. You are in one of the most exciting stretches of coastline. Here have been innumerable shipwrecks, Indian attacks, international arguments and unsolved mysteries.

On this coast Canadians undertook the daunting task of building lighthouses where every stick of lumber, every sack of cement, every nail, had to be back-packed up killing cliffs.

Scott has dug deep in the records; but never deep enough to get mired down. He has selected vital passages in diaries and reports that bring vivid realization of the lonesome life, the dangers, always the threat that storms would prevent delivery of supplies vital to the Man and the Light.

R. Bruce Scott has done a splendid job.

Politics Down Under Changed by Labor Wins

By J. C. GRAHAM
Canadian Press Correspondent

AUCKLAND, N.Z. (CP) — The political scene has changed strikingly in the South Pacific with the election of new labor governments in New Zealand and Australia within a week of each other.

The contrast is perhaps less dramatic in New Zealand than in Australia. Labor has taken office in New Zealand after 12 years out of office, whereas Australian Labor has had to wait 23 years to come to power.

New Zealand Labor is only slightly left of centre, compared with the former National party government which was slightly right of centre. The gap between old and new in Australia is wider.

Both new governments have been at pains to emphasize a new style of governing, but the steps taken in New Zealand have in most cases been less radical.

An example has been policy in dealing with draft defaulters. Both in Australia and New Zealand, Labor was pledged to abolish compulsory military training, and both governments promptly did so on taking office.

But Australia in a spectacular gesture immediately freed all defaulters serving sentences. New Zealand said the emphasis placed on respect for law and order obliged the government to uphold sentences already passed in due process of law, so penalties would not be cancelled.

A similar style is appearing in several aspects of foreign affairs. Both new governments propose early recognition of the mainland China regime in Peking. But Australia went to considerable pains to begin negotiations immediately with considerable fanfare through the Chinese embassy in Paris. New Zealand has been making approaches more circumspectly.

Both new governments have promptly recalled the small army training units from Vietnam—their only remaining military activities there. But these troops were due to leave soon, anyway.

Of more significance, Australia has said it will withdraw its ground troops from the three-nation ANZUK support force in Malaysia and Singapore by the end of 1973. New Zealand Labor also proposes to withdraw forces, but only after consultation and agreement on a reasonable date with Malaysia and Singapore, and Britain which is the third nation involved in the ANZUK support force.

The net effect, however, within a few years is going to be abandonment of the "forward defence" posture which both Australia and New Zealand have adopted for the last two decades, on the theory that security in the South Pacific is best safeguarded by bolstering the region from which threats are most likely to come.

While both new Labor governments deny anything of a "fortress mentality," the outcome will be that forces will be confined far more to the South Pacific area than at any time since the Second World War.

The principle enunciated by both governments is to deny any "abandonment" of Southeast Asia and to replace military support with civil aid.

But, in the South Pacific, New Zealand has announced a proposal which directly involves military initiative. This is the one point on which New Zealand Labor proposes a spectacular gesture of much more direct type than Australia.

The initiative is over the French nuclear tests at Mururoa Atoll in the South Pacific, where test series have been carried out annually for several years.

Australia has proposed taking a case against the tests to the World Court, but the New Zealand Labor regime plans to precipitate an international confrontation if protests at the United Nations fail to halt the tests.

The plan, again endorsed by Prime Minister Norman E. Kirk since the election, is to send a New Zealand frigate to the test zone around Mururoa. It would be manned by volunteers from the New Zealand Navy, but the crew would also include notable civilians, including one or more cabinet ministers.

This year several privately-organized protest vessels left New Zealand while the test series was in progress, but only one—the Canadian-sponsored Greenpeace III—actually reached the area during the test period and incurred exchanges with the French which are still the subject of legal actions. The situation then brought pleas from protest organizations for New Zealand to send a warship as protection, but the then government refused.

Now the new government seems firmly committed to sending a frigate if other protest moves fail.

At the first cabinet meeting it made decisions for a $10-million contribution to relief in Indochina, a $5,000 contribution to the United Nations trust fund on South Africa, and an extra week's benefit payment before Christmas to pensioners and others on social security relief.

Prime Minister Kirk commented: "I am particularly proud that at the first meeting of the cabinet the government has dealt with the needs of its own people so far as assistance is concerned on a proper basis of social justice, and it has also dealt with social justice abroad."

Pollution 'Trap' Developed

NORTH BAY, Ont. (CP) — A research firm here has developed a device to trap pollutants inside an automobile engine.

M. R. S. Development Holdings says its emission control liquidizer, a closed-circuit cooling system, collected six ounces of pollutants in one hour from a car at idling speed.

Albert Z. Morin, president of Trans-Continental Purification Research and Development Ltd. who invented the liquidizer, claims it will eliminate toxic heat emission from the exhaust system; allow for the replacement of the present metal exhaust system with a plastic pipe; and remove a potential explosion hazard inherent in the old exhausts.

He says when raw exhaust gases from an internal combustion engine enter the closed-circuit cooling system, the temperature of the gases is reduced to 33 degrees Centigrade from 275 degrees. "This reduction in heat enables the device's filtering system to effectively trap the solid particles in the discharge," says Mr. Morin.

Tests show that gas discharged has less than .1 per cent carbon monoxide content and undetectable hydro-carbon content.

The liquidizer, in eliminating the need for high combustion engine temperatures, prevents the formation of nitrogen oxides and reduces smog formation.

Since exhaust gases are cooled as soon as they leave the manifold, the need for a heat-resistant exhaust pipe is unnecessary.

Pisa-Propping Plan Set

PISA, Italy (Reuter) — Moves to save the leaning tower of Pisa from collapse have finally gotten the go-ahead from the Italian government, eight years after they were first proposed.

Public works minister Antonio Gullotti has authorized an international competition under which Italian and foreign concerns have one year to present schemes to stop the famous marble tower from crashing to the ground.

Spurred on by fears that Italy's best-known monument will sooner or later collapse into a heap of rubble if nothing is done to stop it, the minister also authorized urgent temporary measures to prop up the tower.

The decision follows an anxious chorus of warnings from experts, who declared early in November that the tower's lean had been gathering momentum for years while Roman bureaucrats fiddled.

The 180-foot-high tower now has a lean of almost 17 feet off the vertical at the top, and has never stopped keeling over since it was begun 800 years ago in 1174.

Tuna Boycott Sought To Preserve Dolphins

DETROIT (AP)— "Boycott Tuna—Save a Dolphin."

That's the slogan on bumper stickers being sold by the Detroit Audubon Society as part of an effort to bring public pressure against the killing of dolphins by tuna fishermen.

The society and other conservationists are urging the boycott of tuna products because, they say, so many dolphins are being killed in tuna nets that they have become an endangered species.

Many commercial fishermen use a method known as purse seining in which a mile-long net is towed by a ship in narrowing circles until the tuna are ensnared in the loop.

The method yields large catches, but critics claim large numbers of dolphins are trapped along with the tuna. Spokesmen for the tuna industry insist the fishermen are doing everything they can to avoid killing the dolphins.

The recently passed federal Marine Mammal Protection Act includes some regulation of the killing of other sea mammals, but specifically excludes the dolphin.

"Dolphins are a long way from Detroit," said Audubon Society publicity chairman Richard Quick, explaining why the crusade was chosen. "But so are redwoods and mountains and oceans."

Enjoy two months of leisure and discovery from $1800.

We call it the Cherry Blossom cruise.

It's a voyage of discovery through the blue Pacific. Calling at romantic islands and exotic cities. Sailing the most beautiful, most serene seas of the world.

And highlighted by arrival in Japan in early Spring—just as the country bursts into color, covered in delicate pink cherry blossoms. You'll bring back photographs that will continue to enchant you for years.

The SS Oronsay will be your home for the voyage. She's a proud white P&O liner with all the gracious hospitality of an English country home.

Oronsay is the ship that enjoyed overwhelming success in her season of Alaskan cruises last Summer. She's big (28,000 tons, over 700 ft. long), fully stabilized, and registered in Britain.

The Oronsay sails in mid-March.

Come aboard in Los Angeles on March 19th. San Francisco on the 21st, or Vancouver on the 23rd.

From the moment you sail, you'll be treated to the most relaxed sea-going atmosphere a cruise ship can offer. Surrounded by a courteous British staff whose sole purpose is to serve you.

You'll enjoy exciting meals in a pleasant restaurant. Stroll acres of decks. And take your pick from a variety of shipboard activities, from swimming and bingo to deck sports and an ACBL Bridge Tournament.

From the Orient to the South Pacific.

Your cruise will take you across the equator twice. Through the East China Sea. The Philippine Sea. The Coral Sea. To 14 ports which have been rich in legend and romance as long as men have sailed to the East.

The Oronsay will spend a day at Honolulu, then cross the International Dateline to Yokohama, for a day in Tokyo. Then on to Kobe, and through the beautiful Inland Sea to Kagoshima.

From Japan, you'll sail to Hong Kong, with three days to explore its fascinating markets and restaurants. Then you'll stop at Guam and Guadalcanal, scene of some of the most bitter fighting of World War II. Next stop — Sydney, where you'll have two days to sample life "down under".

Islands as lovely as their names.

Now for the romantic islands. First port is Noumea, often called "The Paris of the Pacific." Then Suva, capital of the Fiji Islands, Pago Pago on American Samoa, and Rarotonga, largest of the little-known Cook Islands.

And then, Tahiti. You'll spend a day here. And leave knowing why Gauguin found the inspiration for many of his most beautiful paintings on this island of mountains, waterfalls, and wide, white beaches.

From Tahiti you'll sail to Nuku Hiva in the French Polynesian Islands, back across the equator—and home.

With everything provided. Entertainment, meals, accommodation.

Our service is very personal, very friendly, very British. And we know our business. P&O has been doing this sort of thing for 125 years.

Whether you choose deluxe accommodations or a stateroom with bath nearby, you'll be going First Class, with the run of the entire ship.

WRITING CAREER RESUMED

TORONTO (CP) — He's known as Louis, the genial, one-armed doorman to residents of a Toronto condominium apartment building.

But in his native Hungary, thousands know him as Lajos J. Kenderessy, the novelist and playwright.

He says seven of his books — "good, clean love stories and one detective story" — have been published in his native tongue and now he wants to begin a career in English literature at 50 years of age.

He says he has produced seven new manuscripts by working at nights when he gets off his doorman's job near midnight.

A truck ran over his arm when he was nine but the loss of the limb didn't keep him from his studies in Hungary where newspapers were publishing his poetry while he was still in high school.

He later studied playwriting and directing and won the top prize at the Budapest Academy of Theatre Art.

Mr. Kenderessy says his career was cut short when the Communists caught him writing for Radio Free Europe which broadcasts to Iron Curtain countries.

He was sentenced to 10 years in prison and served six of them before freedom fighters released him prior to the 1956 uprising.

He says that when he was behind bars, his wife was told to divorce him or lose her government job. "She got the divorce."

They had no children and he arrived here alone in 1967 and worked as a construction laborer until he got his present job where he's getting used to jokes about his "general's uniform."

Israel Reinforces Sinai Claim

By DAVID LANCASHIRE

SHARM EL SHEIKH, Occupied Sinai (AP) — Egyptian cannons which once threatened Israeli's Red Sea lifeline now stand rusty and impotent near the fastest-growing boomtown in the Middle East.

Israeli is building a resort city at Sharm El Sheikh, and skindivers already are flying from Europe to a new Shangri-La in the disputed desert wilderness where the 1967 Mideast war began.

Construction machines are shoving up apartment buildings and warehouses in the sands captured from Egypt. Architects are planning factories and villas. Tourist planes and buses disgorge visitors by the hundreds.

The growth of Sharm El Sheikh, at the tip of the Sinai Peninsula, packs political importance. It spotlights one issue in any eventual peace agreement between Israel and the Arabs.

Egypt demands that the desert bastion be given back before peace can be reached. The new boomtown clearly underlines Premier Golda Meir's determination that Israel will keep the strategic enclave at all costs.

Even the Arabic name Sharm El Sheikh has vanished from Israeli maps. Israel has quietly re-named the place in Hebrew, calling it "Ofira" from the Ophir of the Bible, where King Solomon sent his ships in search of gold.

So far, Ofira barely exists, but its beaches and coral reefs are becoming a world centre for underwater exploration. The unpolluted Red Sea contains countless species of spectacular-looking fish, so unaccustomed to humans that they don't swim away. Some can almost be fed by hand.

"The place is fantastic, a paradise," said Georges Deblauwe of Brussels, who flew 2,000 miles with a band of 18 Belgian skindivers to explore the depths.

Tony Oudermans, an electronics salesman from Antwerp, and his blonde and bikini-ed wife Flora, have organized the "Euro Diving Safari Club" to bring underwater swimmers on winter package tours to Sharm El Sheikh with their own boats, motors, compressors and air tanks.

A Swiss diving club has also been set up, and other marine explorers come from France.

To protect the coral reefs and underwater life, Israel has declared the zone a nafishing or even taking seature preserve and outlawed shells to shore.

Rome Fights Traffic By 'Rationing' Roads

ROME (AP) — Roads are beginning to lead away from Rome.

Unable to cope with bumper-to-bumper frustration in its historic centre, the city began an experiment that makes it easier to leave town and more difficult to get in.

Those who drive in will find themselves trapped in one of seven sections in the city's centre, hard to move to another section. Roads will lead them away from Rome before they can get to another part in the inner core.

Traffic commissioner Luigi Pallottini, who instituted the plan, calls it a rationing of the historic centre, where even chariots had difficulty in centuries past.

"We don't have room," he said, "so we are rationing Rome." The idea is to give less room to private cars, providing more space for buses and cabs.

The plan, even if it doesn't work, is ingenious because it may ease traffic congestion by making life difficult for motorists. Shopkeepers, restaurant owners and movie houses fear they will lose customers.

During last Christmas and for two months during the summer Rome offered free buses at peak commuting hours to see if Romans would part with their cars.

The bus line reported that riders increased 10 per cent, but nobody could show that traffic decreased correspondingly. Many pedestrians became bus riders. And if the husband took the free bus to work, nothing prevented mama from doing her errands with the car.

SUIT TAGS MEAT FAT

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A coalition of priests, ministers, rabbis and lay persons has filed a $7.5 million class action suit against Safeway markets in California, contending the supermarket chain mislabelled ground beef.

The Interfaith Committee to Aid Farmworkers filed the suit in Superior Court Thursday.

The suit seeks $5 million punitive damages, $2.5 million damages and an injunction to prevent the use of "lean ground beef" labels on Safeway meat, which it contends has as much fat content as regular ground beef.

Now It's Nude Waiters In Honolulu Night Club

HONOLULU (AP) — A Honolulu night club owner, concerned over sagging interest in topless and bottomless waitresses, is offering a new twist — nude waiters.

"It's really giving business a shot in the arm," said Jack Cione. He says his Dunes night club is the first establishment in the United States to feature waiters in the buff.

Cione unveiled the new approach Thursday at a luncheon show which drew a capacity audience of 350 persons, more than half of them women.

He said Friday he'll repeat the feature each Thursday "as long as people keep coming, and I think that'll be quite a while."

At last Thursday's luncheon, the nude waitresses which the club has been featuring for months worked along with the newly-hired waiters.

"We offer a little something for everyone," Cione says.

The show features nude female dancers.

Cione said he decided to hire nude waiters because, "frankly, the topless and bottomless waitresses bit has about had it."

Another woman, asked whether she plans to attend the luncheon again, replied: "Oh no. I've seen everything there is now, haven't I?"

Shot Van Driver Asks for Day Off

PARIS (AP) — With a bullet lodged in his skull, 42-year-old Jean Peroche drove for more than a mile to the garage of the company where he works and calmly reported himself sick.

Police said Peroche was driving along the Paris beltway early today when someone in another car overtook him and fired a shot in his direction.

Peroche reported he felt only a slight bump in the head and had no particular trouble driving his delivery van to the garage.

The bullet lodged itself behind his ear, police said. Peroche is to undergo surgery.

HARTFORD, Conn. — A woman lawmaker has recommended that all Connecticut high school students be required to undergo an examination for venereal disease each year.

State Rep. Virginia Connolly said the VD test may be necessary to combat the rapidly growing threat of the disease in the state. Mrs. Connolly, a registered nurse, served as chairman of the governor's task force on venereal disease and is the new chairman of the house public health and safety committee.

FRESNO, Calif. — The mother of a 9-year-old girl has filed a $40,000 damage suit against school officials for the paddling of her daughter while she was playing on the school grounds.

Mrs. Ruby McDowell charged in the superior court suit that her girl, Debra Lynn, was playing last June 12 when she was "dragged" down the corridor to an office by teachers and spanked with a board.

HALLGARTH, England — When 2-year-old Scott Sharman fell 12 feet from his bedroom window police constable Colin Murray was there to catch him.

Murray, 28, said he was walking past the Sharman home on his beat when he saw Scott climb onto the window sill. So, he said, he sprinted several yards and caught the boy.

HAMILTON — Edmund Bagot of Kitchener, Ont., stepped into a roadside telephone booth to make a call Thursday and stayed there 45 minutes.

When he started out, he found a gust of wind had jammed the door shut.

While the booth rocked in 40-mile-an-hour blasts, he telephoned Bell Canada, who got police to the Saltfleet Township spot. A sergeant used a tire iron to pry open the door.

LOS ANGELES — British actress Glynis Johns, 49, of London, was sued in Superior Court for divorce by her husband Elliott Arnold, 60, a Beverly Hills writer.

The Arnolds were married in Los Angeles in 1964 and separated in 1969. They had no children.

AARHUS, Denmark — Even $2,300 in cash could not persuade gamekeeper Hans Joj Nielsen to sell his favorite pointer named Fix to Jacqueline Onassis.

"He's a good dog and I'm not sure a life as Mrs. Onassis' pet dog would suit him," Nielsen told a secretary from the Greek embassy who turned up at his farm last month.

"Now, however, when Fix makes a mistake, all I have to do is yell 'get moving, or I'll sell you to Onassis' and he's back on the scent."

TULSA, Okla. — Tommy Peacock worked three days at a service station and decided it was time to leave.

He took 134 cartons of cigarettes, $50 in petty cash, $326.61 in gas and oil receipts and $1.50 in other merchandise, closed the station and left a note saying he had taken a salary advance.

Peacock was also being sought in connection with a Junction City, Tex., shooting.

SECOND CHILD FOR SOPHIA

GENEVA (AP) — Actress Sophia Loren, who suffered four miscarriages before bearing her first child four years ago, gave birth today to her second child — a healthy eight-pound boy.

Doctors said the 38-year-old actress and the baby were in excellent health.

"We are delighted," the actress' husband, movie producer Carlo Ponti, 59, said in a telephone interview.

"He is a beautiful boy," Ponti said, adding that the couple will have to talk it over before naming him.

Miss Loren's first child, Carlo Jr., or "Cipi," was born in December, 1968.

Ponti said his wife would resume her acting career "in three or four months."

Planning Power Development Key

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

If Victoria is looking for an example of an advisory planning commission which provides ample community input, conducts its business out in the open and makes a positive contribution to the planning process it need go no further than Richmond.

Generally recognized as one of the most effective planning commissions in B.C., the Richmond APC was anything but that up to 1961.

As William Kerr, the municipality's director of planning, recalled: "It was pretty well redundant because it was just rubber-stamping everything we did."

Then came the shake-up. The membership was expanded from nine to 25, most of them still appointed by the council on the at-large basis, but with nominations invited from ratepayers' and senior citizens' groups as well as the Chamber of Commerce.

At the same time the traditional, time-consuming chore of studying individual rezoning applications was removed, and the commission entrusted with "broad, long-range planning." Five sub-committees with specialized fields of interest were set up.

Kerr said the commission's members are not regarded as "speaking for" their various groups. But, they do report back to the organizations on those APC matters which can be made public, so that there is a constant percolation of information to the public. All full meetings of the commission are open to the press.

"There is quite a bit of feed-back," Kerr admitted.

Thus the APC in Richmond fulfils what many believe to be the ideal role of planning commissions: representing the citizen's point of view to the planner and council in the plan preparation process, and then taking the message back to the community groups they represent.

"This public information aspect may be the best reason for the existence of an advisory planning commission today in the planning process," says a report prepared by a New Westminster municipal planning service.

Could a commission structured on those lines work in Victoria, or would it even be desirable? Some would say 25 is too unwieldy a number—Victoria's commission, including ex officio members, totals 18 — but no doubt there could be wider representation than now exists.

Terry Farmer, president of the Victoria Chamber of Commerce which is showing an increasingly vigorous interest in the city's growth and future, said the chamber would "jump at the chance" of having a voice on the APC.

"We could always find some very well qualified persons for that job," he said. "We have people who are very interested in the community but who don't want to become involved in politics."

One of the interesting points of study on the city hall scene in the year ahead will be to see how much, if at all, Victoria's newest and youngest alderman succeeds in producing his own shake-up of the planning machinery, including the APC.

Sam Bawlf was, after all, elected on a platform which contained the pledge that he would work for the establishment of "A planning dialogue between city hall and neighborhoods through council-appointed citizens' committees."

Certainly, as an experienced planning consultant, 28-year-old Bawlf could become a valuable "deputy" to the chairman of council's planning committee, Ald. Mike Young.

But Young doesn't see eye to eye with Bawlf on the potential value of local area planning commissions, which the latter first proposed some months ago as chairman of the James Bay Community Association.

Bawlf envisages eight such commissions, representing the various districts such as James Bay, Victoria West and Fairfield, working in co-operation with the APC.

The APC would continue to advise council regarding the over-all impact of planning matters on the whole community, while the area commissions would represent the concern of citizens in areas directly affected by specific proposals.

Young has no quarrel with the theory, but says in practice council will just be creating another arm on the octopus of bureaucracy.

"To get a community response we must deliver the goods to the community," he says.

Joseph Cunliffe, the commission chairman, feels much the same way. The vehicle for citizen involvement in planning already exists, in the form of the Community Planning Association of Canada, he claims.

In almost any conversation on the problem of planning Victoria's growth in an orderly, sensible manner, one argument is certain to crop up again and again: the importance of formulating — and then adhering to — a master-plan to guide the processes of growth.

There have been two such plans drawn up, the Capital Region Plan of 1959 and the Over-all Plan for Victoria of 1965, but the city has done no more than accept these as general guides to development.

Nor is there now any immediately declared intention to develop a general plan, although there are many individual studies and proposals funnelling through city hall which could form the basis for community plans that could, in turn, become part of an over-all plan for Victoria.

The Spence-Sales report on the future of the downtown area, the James Bay study, the Victoria West report, the Waterfront document — these and others surfaced during 1972 and make up a useful framework for future plan shaping.

In the drafting of such a plan, the APC would have a vital part to play.

Certainly, if the year just ended has proved one thing, with its rash of shocks, revelations, accusations and squabbles, it is that the city must stop adopting a defensive posture and take a much more aggressive approach to planning.

As Mayor Pollen and others have pointed out, the city's zoning bylaws have proved ineffective weapons, unable to ward off determined developers and prevent undesirable "monstrosities" of development.

Pollen's suggested solution to this situation is to have council move ahead as quickly as possible with the task of designating firm community plans for areas such as James Bay and Victoria West, then registering these plans with the provincial government so that they become inflexibly "locked in."

If that is to be tackled in 1973 it means that the APC, as the voice of citizen opinion, and the sounding board for council's and the planning department's ideas, will probably be busier than it ever has been.

Hard, tedious work. But, if it produces the desired result, Victoria's future could be the better for it.

Base To Hire 400

CFB Esquimalt will shortly be hiring about 400 additional men to carry out work made possible by a $1,042,000 allocation under the federal government's labor-intensive program.

The allocation is about half of B.C.'s share of the $13.3 million project which is designed to provide employment until the end of May. B.C.'s share is $2,121,000.

The bulk of the money earmarked for the Esquimalt area will be used on maintenance projects, including the improvement, drainage and interior painting of public married quarters, bush clearance at Nanaimo and Rocky Point and interior renovations to the operations building in the dockyard.

Plans for these projects are completed and the hiring of personnel is expected to start soon.

An armed forces' spokesman said Friday the allocation is "slightly larger than last year's when in the neighborhood of 400 men were taken on."

Other bases in B.C. allotted funds for this purpose include Comox, Chilliwack, Baldy Hughes, Holberg, Masset and Kamloops.

The $13.3 million is part of a total $60 million approved by the treasury board to create employment within departmental programs.

Program Eases Path Into 'Straight' World

By SUSAN RUTTAN
Times Staff

A group of William Head Institution inmates have been getting periodic glimpses of the outside world lately, thanks to eight local volunteers.

The program, called Link-up, is an attempt to bridge the wide gap between the inmate and ex-con on one side, and the business community on the other.

It was started last fall, the brainchild of Michael Bennett, executive director of the John Howard Society of Vancouver Island, the after-care agency for male inmates.

Bennett found a willing partner in Cleve Tuttle, personnel manager of Eaton's. Tuttle, who has done volunteer work with parolees for several years, recruited his business friends for the program.

Inmate and volunteer normally meet about once every six weeks, whenever the inmate gets a day's temporary absence.

The volunteer picks him up at the prison, meets him for lunch and possibly for a coffee after work, and drives him back in the evening. The two keep contact during the rest of the day by telephone.

If the inmate doesn't call in when he should, the volunteer telephones the prison authorities and then take over. This has only happened once to Tuttle, and he knew where the inmate was heading — to his favorite pub.

"Once we're friends with these people, they don't like to disappoint us," Tuttle said. "They're just guys, just people, with certain difficulties in certain areas."

Tuttle said the inmates are shy at first, uncomfortable at being on the outisde. They feel everyone who sees them knows they're from the prison.

"I've had fellows come out who ask never to come out again," he said.

Although he's a personnel manager himself, Tuttle admits that the business community often excludes the ex-con, refusing to give him a job.

"As they get closer to their release we do our very best to help them find work," he said.

This, of course, was Bennett's whole purpose in getting people from the business community into the program. He hopes they will soften the stand against men who have done time.

His hope is that real friendships can take root from these periodic meetings between executive and inmate.

Bottle Re-Use Pressed

Nate Bello of the Regional Recycling Depot, 4026 Borden, said Friday, "Ninety-five per cent of all bottles could be re-used. This includes everything from ketchup bottles and mustard jars to liquor bottles.

"In 1972 we shipped over 100 tons of glass — and that's just from people bringing it in to the depot. We're open four days a week."

Bello has already approached the Liquor Control Board to discuss the feasibility of the board using returnable bottles for its own brands of liquor.

He said that in 1971 the board used 1,466,628 25-ounce bottles and 709,296 12-ounce bottles — all non-returnable.

"We've been saving all the liquor cases for the past month. We're taking them and stockpiling them in the hopes that the board will eventually take them back," said Bello.

LCB chairman William Bruce said, "Any liquor company is reluctant to use them again."

He said the board has no plans for using returnable bottles.

Into Our Winter, a Patchwork Tomcat

WHEN WE LAST crossed our favorite trout stream it was galloping under its highway bridge in a crested yellow freshet. The alders were bare, the evergreens swayed to the assault of a wet southeaster, and the inland mountains were blanketed with cloud.

These winter days it is hard to believe that summer ever was, or that in a matter of months we will look out from our windows at American tourists digging for clams in the wrong places.

They also demonstrate through their own vigorous life-style that winter is a season to be used and enjoyed. They visit, and the fact that friends or relatives may live miles distant along the highway that serves a strung-out community makes no never-mind.

They attend night school classes, or go steelhead fishing when the water's right, or tackle the home improvement jobs for which summer never yields enough time. Campbell River Concert Association brings quality entertainment to town and draws full houses: we've had Victoria Symphony Orchestra and the Canadian Opera Company, and look forward to Spanish ballet with flamenco guitars.

Add these and other spare-time pursuits to the exigencies of making a living, and we find that the days aren't long enough. Summer's fine and we'll welcome it back — but there's something to be said for a jaunt in the weeping woods and a hot buttered rum at the end of it.

This is do-it-yourself country. Some jobs I won't touch, and others I approach warily. For any electrical monkeying beyond changing a light switch, I call in a calm electrician. ("If my helper screams," says he as he trips a circuit breaker, "that wire he's holding is a live one.")

But with power tools to help and inspiration provided by a friend who is building his house chapter by chapter from instruction books, I now tackle minor jobs around the place with confidence.

Small stuff like shoe boards for clothes closets and rods or hooks to hang things on no longer dismay me. The knife rack my dear one asked for was made and installed in the same evening, to my surprise and hers no less.

When a lazy susan carried indolence to the final extreme, I yanked it from its cupboard and installed shelves. They fitted. On the strength of that performance, Win has asked for a kitchen cabinet guaranteed not to wobble and with no plastic wood in its joints.

Winter has brought other diversions.

We gave each other snowshoes for Christmas and look forward to floundering along snow-choked trails on them before spring.

Into our lives has come what we insisted would never again claim our affections a pet in the person of a little tomcat with patchwork coat of black and white.

Two girls from up the road brought Patches to our door on an icy night. He was about three months old. His people had abandoned him when they moved on, and until the girls coaxed him down from a tree with a saucer of milk, he had been clinging to life as best he could.

They couldn't keep him — they had cats of their own — and he would go to the pound if nobody took him in.

Sorry, I said, we didn't want another cat. Too bad, Win said, but if we adopted him the highway that had claimed our tough black Cleo would probably kill him as well.

Minutes later, he was rubbing against our ankles with loud and rusty purr while we made a start on filling out his skin-and-bones frame.

We have been reminded when the great gales come walloping in that the sea is enemy as well as friend. It's easier now for us to read behind the Mona Lisa smiles that fishing camp operators and other shore-dwellers sometimes wear when the August guest remarks on the picturesque quality of the beaches. We know how those beached acquired that look.

Half a year on this strip of unorganized territory we now call home isn't enough to justify flat pronouncements on the merits and drawbacks of country living.

Still, reviewing those months, I find that they've gone better than average well. We enjoy today and look forward to tomorrow, and what reasonable couple can ask for better than that?

Mending China an Art family

WENDY DEY - EDITOR

By NICOLE STRICKLAND

There it lies, your favorite teacup, the one your Aunt Maudie gave you when you got engaged — in 10 little pieces.

Chin up. As long as there are people like Audrey Martin around, you needn't cry over spilt tea.

For the past decade, Victoria's Audrey Martin has made it her hobby, and then her occupation, to mend fine ("and not so fine") china.

"I try to be honest; if the cost of mending a certain item will exceed the cost of the item itself I advise people not to get the piece mended unless it has great sentimental value. But most of the broken china brought to me is really worth fixing."

Mrs. Martin, who sits in her attic workshop surrounded by paint, lacquer thinner, brushes, and glues ("never say I glue something — the word is bond, with cement"), works on a large old dinner plate that has chips along its edges, filling in, sanding, and eventually painting the mend.

"I can sit and chat only when the work isn't too complicated — with some certain repairs, I have to have complete concentration."

The craft takes time to learn, and Mrs. Martin says that she has learned much from working over the years. She keeps a special 'bit box' of china rose petals, leaf petals, sea shells, and trim that she uses when she needs to improvise.

"Some things mend so well that it's almost impossible to tell they were broken, but one can't hide a break on a plain white surface and, of course, one can't hide a mend on glass, because one can see right through it.

"I would say I'm 99 per cent successful with glass and crystal. Some things just won't mend, and crystal tends to shatter. You can't make glass from nothing if there's a hole in the object — you can fill the hole with something opaque, but that shows."

Audrey Martin is sent bits of broken china to restore from all over Vancouver Island. Her name is known from the typewritten cards she gave every Victoria shop selling china when she decided to make china mending an occupation rather than a hobby. Since that time, her reputation has spread by word of mouth.

"I like anything that presents a challenge. My masterpiece was a Dresden figurine of a man about 18 inches high that arrived in 39 pieces. He was half of a pair valued at $1,000, so it was important he be mended perfectly. The whole thing took me two or three months. There were fingers missing and chips gone, but when I finished putting him back together and restoring the missing parts, you couldn't see any mends.

"I'm never really satisfied, but I have to stop myself from overpainting or over-restoring an item and perhaps spoiling it."

To anyone contemplating his own mending job, Mrs. Martin says:

"Everything must be absolutely clean before it can be mended, and if it's been mended before it may need to be taken further apart and the old glue removed first. This work takes time and one should not hurry. After all, if you're going to to fix something, you may as well make it perfect.

Scholarships for Prostitutes

Superior Court Judge Charles Z. Smith, who earlier in his career spent two years in municipal court trying nearly all of Seattle's prostitution cases, says the fund will be used to help women convicted of prostitution in the last five years.

But Smith and other officials don't hold out much hope for success.

The fund was started with $1,500 that Smith recently fined Ralph I. Goldberg, 75, following Goldberg's conviction on charges that he was living off the earnings of a prostitute.

Smith said this week that he fined and put Goldberg on probation, rather than sentence him to jail, because he decided that Goldberg "should do something to recompense the years he had spent degrading women through prostitution."

Dr. Jennie James, a University of Washington psychiatrist who has conducted a two-year study on prostitution, says a barrier to educational advancement usually is the motive for a women's becoming a prostitute.

She said a similar scholarship program was launched in Detroit but no one applied.

"Prostitutes don't like to change their profession," she said.

Officials say there has been only one applicant so far, a woman convicted of prostitution twice in the last two years. Smith said the woman, who is on welfare, wants to study counselling at Seattle Community College after she completes high-school equivalency exams. She was not identified.

The scholarships will be administered by the Seattle Municipal Probation Service. Smith said, with awards to be made by a board that is to include a municipal court judge, a state court judge, an educationist and a social worker.

One requirement of the fund is that a woman must be registered in a college or vocation school before receiving money — a measure officials use of the funds for other than school expenses.

However, Smith said, a prostitute who is not attending classes may win a scholarship if the Seattle-area college agrees to enrol her for at least one quarter without charging tuition.

Second Chance for Baby In Open-Heart Surgery

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Unusual heart surgery at the age of two months has given new health to little Jefferey Cox. His rare heart defect was spotted at a travelling mountain clinic.

Jeffery was born with a condition called an aorto-pulmonary window. There was a hole between the two main arteries leading from his heart.

Children with this kind of heart defect, which causes high blood pressure in the lungs, seldom live more than a year.

The solution — open heart surgery — had apparently never been performed on a child as young as Jefferey. A University of Kentucky doctor said the youngest child known to have undergone such surgery was four months old.

The doctor, who asked not to be identified, said Jefferey's condition was diagnosed in time because of his mother and a clinic the university operates in rural communities.

"These travelling clinics are wonderful things," the doctor said. "You've got to remember that a child in a big city can get the proper diagnosis of a defect like this but in the rural mountains it just isn't usually possible."

Mrs. Willie Cox, whose husband is a construction worker in eastern Kentucky's Knott County, said she suspected something was wrong shortly after Jeffery was born.

"He didn't grow any, his color was bad and when he'd take a bottle he'd perspire a lot," she said.

Mrs. Cox's doctor examined the baby, found a slight heart murmur and suggested she take the baby to the travelling clinic.

The doctors there told her that Jefferey needed surgery immediately. Jefferey underwent open heart surgery at the university's medical centre Dec. 21 and is doing fine now.

HOME-MADE TOYS IMAGINATIVE FUN

NEW YORK (AP) — Steven Caney lectured on the merit of the refrigerator carton at Harvard, developed his own theory on the guilty parent syndrome and is the only father in the neighborhood who has kids knock on his door and ask, "May I come in and play with you?"

No modern day Pied Piper, Caney, 31, is a toy consultant, lecturer and designer of the Boston Children's Museum, who has discovered that in many instances children don't want toys, they want to play with their parents.

The father of three-year-old Noah and six-year-old Jennifer, Caney realized he was as much a part of the guilty parent syndrome as the next parent, always stopping at the airport to buy a toy so he wouldn't come home empty-handed.

A year ago, he stopped bringing home toys and announced, "I brought you me." Sometimes he spiced the surprise with presents of old bottle caps or other scraps from which he and the children could together construct toys.

Caney has discovered more than 200 foolproof toys that even the most unmechanical parents and children can make. He's put 52 of them into Steven Caney's Toy Book, published recently by Workman Publishing Co.

Caney believes more parents would try to make toys with their children but are afraid they will fail because instructions are difficult. He guarantees that his are foolproof.

Caney, who has developed the toys with 26 kids from his Carlisle, Mass., neighborhood, says there are not necessarily right or wrong ways for constructing his toys.

For example, one boat invented by 13-year-old Rick Culkins is a milk carton cut on the diagonal to form two pontoons.

Caney says his all-time most successful toy and the one which he includes in the book's dedication is a refrigerator carton.

When he noticed delivery men taking away the carton that a new refrigerator came in, Caney stopped the amazed men and demanded his box. In the days to come the box became a school, a library, grocery store and fire engine.

Disabilities Hit More Boys

MONTREAL (CP) — Boys account for more than 80 per cent of all children who suffer from perceptual-motor disabilities, such as double-vision or garbled hearing, says Wendy Campbell, a special education teacher.

Mrs. Campbell says such problems may not be as readily recognized in girls because motor-skill situations are presented to boys at an earlier age.

A Sound Middle Between Two Unsound Extremes

By COLMAN McCARTHY
Special to the Times

What is a good meal?

Raise the question with a dozen people and, each touching a different part of the elephant, they respond with a dozen distinct answers.

A worthwhile meal for a steelworker or fisherman would have different gustatory reactions from the banker or typist; manual work and mental work demand different diets. The citizens of one part of a country delight in a regional table much different from those of another part.

But there remains the question of whether "good food" is still possible, meaning food that benefits not only our bones, muscles and blood in a healthy way but also provides emotional satisfactions.

Food specialists like Sidney Margolius, Harrison Welford, Robert Choate and Jean Mayer have been repeating in detailed and current ways what Adelle Davis has been telling us all along: "What's sad is that we're almost completely at the mercy of unethical manufacturers who don't give a damn about anybody's health. They have one goal, and that is to make money." (Family Circle, Feb. 1972).

Filthy Factories

Yet even when we know the dangers of useless additives, filthy food factories, food-borne diseases and greedy food manufacturers, large numbers of people believe that living well has little to do with eating well. They "live well" by drinking coffee, tea or cola drinks, all containing caffeine which does nothing for the body and may in fact be harmful. They shake iodized salt onto their food, heap on the sugar. They use tobacco, a known health danger. Then it's washed down with alcohol, the nation's most abused drug. What can this part of the population possibly care about healthy and satisfying food, when taking such dietary "supplements" as caffeine, salt, sugar, and alcohol?

A final difficulty in selecting a worthy meal — after allowances for individual variety and indifference — is the near-impossibility of understanding not only what has been added to our food but also what has been taken out. "Subtractives" are as crucial to know about as additives, yet much less information is given the consumer.

Doubts about missing nutrients are raised not only by those in the organic movement but even of all people, by the canning industry. Presenting the case for "voluntary" nutritional labelling — as against mandatory — its spokesman recently went before the U.S. Senate to speak about "the wide variation in food composition of raw agricultural products." Cited was an analysis that said: "The nutrient content of freshly harvested edible plants varies. Usually this variation is not more than several fold, but on occasion it may exceed one-hundredfold. These variations result from the interplay of a number of factors, chiefly genetics, location, season, soils, fertilization of soils and maturity."

Making a similar point, but only about the soil a crop is grown in, Lee Fryer writes in Earth Foods (Follett): "A typical vegetable operation in California, Texas or Florida may grow three crops a year in the same field in a soil that is beat, molded, rilled, hilled, gassed, anointed, treated, watered and harvested with complete disregard for the bacteria and microcreatures that once lived there. The corporate farmer will use only those fertilizers that give increases in yield and in the grade of the crops. This means that the fertilization is usually limited to nitrogen, phosphate and potash, plus a few other elements that must be used lest the plants die or become unmarketable. It is a grim system, as far as the nutritional interests of consumers are concerned . . . the critical minerals for building nutritive values in the foods simply cannot be supplied fast enough by the depleted bacteria in these soils to enrich the crops, and in turn, to nourish you."

The situation was bleak even 25 years ago, before agribusiness drove away the small farmers. Earth Foods reports a research study made in 1947-48 to determine the variations in vegetable crops, depending on how they were fertilized and grown. The variations were so wide that if you ate the best lettuce as a source of iron to help you avoid iron deficiency anemia, one head a day would do it. But if your supermarket was selling lettuce from poor soil — the lettuce would still look fresh and pretty — you would need to eat 30 heads a day.

With all this to talk about before seating your guests to a worthy meal what can you serve them that would raise their spirits and lengthen their days? What follows is a meal, a composite dinner, that I have served in my home to people I care for. The dishes are meant to be selective, not finicky or faddist.

Traditional American meals begin with soup. Originally, soups were the meal of misers, and indeed the soup line is still the way charities feed the homeless and nameless poor. Actually, the poor — for once — may be getting the better deal. Important food nutrients are plentiful in soups boiled with cattle or chicken bones. The meat itself may be of questionable value, but bones are difficult to tamper with. A shot of vinegar should be used; it will extract the calcium. After this, celery, carrots, tomatoes, onions, potatoes, kelp (in place of salt and pepper, and for its valuable iodine), broccoli and almost any vegetable can be added. Seasoning is by herbs.

Trouble with Soup

Americans have trouble with soup. It is slow cooking, and we love speed. It calls for a stock kettle, but we use undersized pans barely able to hold a quart of water. The preparation of soup is messy, but we have allowed our architects to design kitchens that are only tight and trim. The built-in orderliness, rimmed with formica, makes you feel guilty if you mess it up with bones and vegetable leftovers.

Preparing a salad calls for imagination, but even a commonplace mix of leafy greens provides the important vitamins of A, C and E.

Romaine and Boston lettuce have better reputations than iceberg, the latter often having the nutritional quality of frozen water.

No part of the meal offers greater opportunity for variety and flair than salad. Two kinds easily made are apple-peanut salad and pineapple cole slaw. Molded salads — with everything from raw vegetables or fruits in gelatin — take more time but they communicate the message that you worked hard preparing the meal. Commercial salad dressings are not required to carry a list of ingredients, so this is another reason to avoid the greasy concoctions that often taste and look like Vitalis. Natural food cookbooks have ample recipes for non-gunk dressings, one that enhance rather than dominate the taste.

For bread on the table, any kind made from whole grain flour is nutritionally worth it. Vitamin E is found in the germ of the wheat. It is still possible to find whole grain bread, but not easily; it spoils quickly, hence mass marketing is impossible. Small bakeries, where quality still counts and regular customers are appreciated, usually bake daily amounts of health bread. The larger producers, finally sensing public suspicion about white bread, despite the "enriched" label, which is as puffy as the bread itself, are now coming into the dark bread market in a large way; prices as high as 50 cents are being charged for loaves boasting "no artificial preservatives." A way of avoiding the high-up prices is home baked bread. An advantage is knowing what goes into the loaves, whereas the commercial baker can use up to 60 chemicals and not tell you about one.

For the main dish, nothing comes close to fresh fish for both nutrition and taste.

Unlike cattle and chickens, whose diets are closely controlled by profit-minded owners, not to mention rigid controls over even the animal's daily physical movements, fish live and play in the mineral-rich ocean. They get plenty of exercise and can be bought not long out of the water. An objection to fish in the deliberate killing of a living being. For those whose conscience allows this, though, the fish market is a nutritionally happier place than the meat market. Sea food, from blues to oysters, is high in proteins, rich in vitamins and minerals, and low in calories.

Vegetables are among the unknowns in the marketplace, because we know so little about how they lived before being set out on fancy display. Yet, assuming some nutrition is still left in the "fresh" vegetables, careful cooks know several ways of preserving the nutrients. Don't peel or soak the vegetables. Place them in boiling water, the least amount possible. Cook only until tender. Drink the water after cooling or use it for the soup; some vitamins (C and the Bs) are water soluble. White potatoes, sweet potatoes, carrots and others should not be peeled; the skin is nutritionally rich. Mash potatoes using a mix of eggs and honey, rather than melted butter. A steamer is best for cooking.

At one time, desserts were nutritionally important to the meal, but today they are little more than final insults of useless sweetness. The emotional idea of dessert is to send your guests away with a feeling of uplifting taste, not with empty calories and sugar stuck in the gums. An ideal dessert is some combination of fruit. A wholesome dessert is the banana split. This is not the soda fountain mess of syrups and dairy ice cream, but broiled bananas (a few minutes in the oven, no more) split down the middle filled with a mix of honey and wheat germ.

Amazing Character

I've served meals like this and have had sufficient luck to have often been served them in return. In The Adventures of Augie March, still seen by many as Saul Bellow's finest novel, we are told early than in the March home" the meals were of amazing character altogether and of huge quantity — Anna was a strong believer in eating. (There were) bowls of macaroni without salt or pepper or butter or sauce, brain stews and lung stews, calf's foot jelly with bits of calf's hair and sliced egg, cold pickled fish, crumb-stuffed tripes, canned corn chowder . . ."

We should all be like Mrs. March, and lucky was young Augie. Meals of amazing character, begun perhaps with an amazing grace, are not impossible to cook and serve. They represented a sound middle between two unsound extremes. One is in the attitude expressed once by Henry Luce when he called food "mere fuel." The other belongs to the health food faddists who are among the nation's champion bores, forever prattling about their latest buys at the health store.

Beauty Burning 'Ruins Health'

MONTREAL (CP) — A 60-year-old Montreal woman says a $1,500 facial rejuvenating treatment left her with second degree burns and ruined health.

Miss C. Cantin said in an interview she fled the clinic where the non-surgical treatment was administered because she was left unattended despite "excruciating" pain.

Miss Cantin said she entered the clinic in November after paying $1,500 cash borrowed from two banks. She wanted the skin peeling treatment to improve her appearance so she could find a part-time job.

After she was sedated, she said, her face was smeared with an unidentified substance and wrapped in bandages.

Three days later the bandages were removed. The subsequent pain led to "a world of nightmare and hallucination."

A week after she enterd the clinic, Miss Cantin said she was unable to stand the pain anymore, so she fled the building in the middle of the night, hitch-hiked to her home and was admitted to St. Luc Hospital next day. Doctors there said she was suffering from infected second degree burns.

A spokesman for the Quebec College of Physicians and Surgeons said the college is studying the case, following a complaint from Miss Cantin, to see whether any medical malpractice was involved.

"The clinic operator was not a doctor," the spokesman said, "and we can take action only if there is reason to believe there was false medical practice involved."

Turkish Women Take First Step

ISTANBUL (AP) — A group of housewives has started a political party for women. By Turkish standards, that's a step forward for womankind, although it's hardly a big advance on the women's liberation front.

Eighteen middle-aged women who launched the Turkish National Women's party a few weeks ago say they have received 2,000 applications for membership, many of them from men.

Mrs. Melike Bayburt, presiding officer, says the party's aim is to "make a stronger Turkey by developing the role of women in Turkish society, in partnership with men."

She often quotes the country's founder, Kemal Ataturk, who reformed Turkish society after the First World War. He took many steps to improve the lot of women who have been traditionally subjected by Islam to a subsidiary role in society.

Since then, Turkey has been retreating on the issue of women's rights, the party maintains, and the facts tend to confirm the complaint. Polygamy has increased since 1930. In 1935, 17 women were elected to the National Assembly. Now there are only seven.

Mrs. Bayburt, 47, has five grandchildren. She knows how hard the life of Turkish women can be. She was married at 14 and had her first child a year later. Although she came from an old Ottoman family with relatively liberal views, she received no formal education as a child. After her marriage she attended night classes.

"At present women in Turkey are wives, mothers, cooks and agricultural laborers," Mrs. Bayburt says, "but they are not consulted when decisions are taken. We want to change this."

Her party plans to open branches in six provinces.

Engineering study could evaluate new gas production method

Why Not Natural Gas Produced From Sewage?

it's our environment

By THE ENVIRONMENTAL CENTRE
Of Greater Victoria

Why don't we? That's a question more of us should ask when it comes to issues concerning protection of the environment and the utilization of resources. We may be told that it's never been tried, that the public isn't ready for it yet, or that it simply isn't done that way. But it never hurts to ask.

Methane Gas System

QUESTION: Why don't we put in one of those methane gas systems to produce natural gas from our sewage? — G. H. Taylor.

ANSWER: There's probably no reason we couldn't make natural gas from the sewage that we now are dumping raw into the sea.

A careful engineering study of your proposal undoubtedly would yield lists of considerations for and against gas generation, but until people ask "why not?" no such study will be made. And our elected officials will have fewer alternatives to decide upon.

But what is methane and how can it be produced from sewage?

Methane is the chief component of natural gas and is a product of anaerobic bacterial decomposition of vegetable matter under water. It forms naturally in watery swamps as well as in anaerobic digesters that are used in most sewage disposal plants.

Sewage plants normally are set up to get rid of the wastes as fast as possible rather than to generate a maximum amount of gas. Although many plants use some of the gas to power their internal operations, thought would have to be given to maximizing the gas production. It has been suggested that garbage, including waste paper, could be added to sewage to make more gas.

We are told that a ton of dry organic matter would produce about 20,000 cubic feet of gas worth about $4.50. Further, a U.S. chemist has estimated that sewage and garbage in that country could create half again as much natural gas as is currently being used there. So you see, sewage and garbage could be extremely important in our future — especially when you consider that some experts believe the world's supply of fossil gas might last only 50 more years.

Energy Producing Plant

But before we demand that our engineers build such an energy-producing plant for us here, say at Macaulay Point, we must be ready to pay for the large fermentation tanks and gas storage tanks. While we could use the gas for heating, cooking and for operating motor vehicles, we might find that it would be more expensive than gas piped in from Alberta fields or petroleum brought to us by tanker. Further, since we aren't accustomed to using natural gas here, we'd have to change over or perhaps generate our electricity with the gas.

Finally, it seems highly unlikely that we could produce nearly enough gas with our sewage and garbage to meet our total local energy needs. But undoubtedly we could produce a part of it and thereby not tax the world's dwindling fossil fuel supplies. And we still could use the expended waste materials for fertilizer and soil builder — if more of us would continually ask the question, "why don't we?"

QUESTION: In answer to a recent question, you said most of the smoke from the B.C. Forest Products Mill in Victoria really is steam. Why is there any smoke at all? Surely the technology exists to eliminate it totally. — No Name.

ANSWER: There is smoke because B.C. Forest Products operates its sawmill and plywood plants on power generated by burning wood wastes. They could eliminate most all of it by buying power from B.C. Hydro, for example, but the expense would be too great, W. A. Nelson, manager of the mill, told us. Further there'd still be all the wood waste that would have to be disposed of in some other way. Nelson said that as it is now, the company can't justify all its present anti-pollution expenditures at the Victoria mill on strict economic grounds, but that the costs are made up on an overall company basis. So, in answer to your last question, yes, the technology does exist, but apparently the company can't afford the cost. As we pointed out in our earlier column, this mill remains under the jurisdiction of the City of Victoria, and its Smoke By-Law permits that much smoke to be discharged.

Disposing of Pesticides

QUESTION: Would you be so kind as to reprint the instructions for disposing of old pesticides. I've recently come across some old bug and weed killers — both powder and liquid — in the basement and I want to get rid of them. — G.C.

ANSWER: Originally, we had said that old pesticides could be taken to the provincial department of agriculture. However, the department's entomology branch no longer is disposing of pesticides for the public.

A spokesman for the office said that British Columbia had been the only province offering a free pesticide disposal service and that it has been discontinued because of lack of demand.

But hang onto those pesticides. We'll try to find a safe place to dispose of them. When we do, we'll report to you in this column. If you must get them out of your basement at once, give us a call at 388-9832 and we'll try to arrange to take them off your hands.

Don't you have a question about our environment? Send it to "It's Our Environment" in care of the Times. We'll take it up with the experts and give you an answer.

Mother Is Maid for Daughter

dear abby

DEAR ABBY: I have a daughter who is 28 years old and she never lifts a finger in the house to help me. I have had gall bladder surgery and trouble with my nerves due to "the change" and I can't stand the aggravation this girl gives me.

She throws her clothes around and I am always picking up after her. She never finishes anything she starts. She started to sew a dress and left the hem and zipper for me.

You should see her room! I have to keep her door locked so no one will see it.

She used to give me $10 a week room and board, but I haven't seen a penny for a year as she is saving to get married. Meanwhile, she doesn't have anybody steady, but she invites a different fellow over here for supper nearly every night and I do the cooking and wait on them like I'm the maid, and she leaves the mess for me to clean up.

Even my husband doesn't help me. He's too lazy to wash the car so I have to do it. I could write a book. Please help me. — Doormat.

DEAR DOORMAT: You can't be a doormat unless you lie down first. Refuse to pick up after your daughter and don't let her make a servant of you. Same goes for your husband. If you don't put your foot down, they will. On you!

DEAR ABBY: My husband has a 26-year-old daughter by his first wife. Sally is being married soon. She has already had two weddings and two divorces, but she wants a lovely big wedding so her father can "give her away" — again. I think this is ridiculous, especially since the man Sally is marrying has also been married twice, besides which he and Sally have been living together for a year.

I say Sally and her fiance ought to go away and quietly get married and forget the wedding. Her father says whatever she wants to do is all right with him.

I'd like your opinion. — Up To Here.

DEAR UP: Under the circumstances, the less conspicuous the wedding, the better. (P.S. One thing is certain, these two won't need a rehearsal.)

DEAR ABBY: I am a married woman, happily married with two children. My parents divorced when I was 12. That was 15 years ago, but to hear my mother talk, you would think it happened only yesterday. She is so bitter and full of resentment, all she ever talks about is how much she hates my father.

I don't happen to see him the way she does. Fortunately, Mother lives out of town, but she telephones me often to give her long, miserable monologues leaving me drained, depressed, and angry. I am sending my parents the following letter. I should have written it years ago:

Dear Divorced Parents:

I love you both for different reasons, so please don't feel that because I love one of you I cannot love the other. Try to understand that even though you no longer love each other, I still love both of you.

I cannot be expected to know what went wrong with your marriage, nor do I want to know the details of who did what to whom, so please don't try to tell me your side of it. Don't ask me to judge either one of you, just help me to accept your parting so that I can build a life of my own though my parents live apart.

I still need to be loved by both of you, so please don't allow your resentment, however justified, to destroy my relationships with my grandparents, aunts, uncles, and cousins on both sides.

I know that you both love me, so please let me love you both. — Your Child.

Many couples who become engaged under the Christmas tree, will plan to marry during the coming year.

They and other courting couples may want to study the 48-page illustrated Birth Control Handbook by Donna Cherniak and Allan Feingold.

The authors stress that dissemination of knowledge about family planning is vital. With this in mind, they explain the function of the female and male reproductive organs and how hormones influence the menstrual cycle.

One chapter deals with male and female sterilization. Another tells you about legal abortion methods and what they involve.

Caucasus Tribes Get Tribute

The Soviet government has hailed the anniversary of the autonomy of two ethnic groups which spent 14 years in exile, accused of collaborating with Germany in the Second World War, But were later cleared of the charges.

The Soviet Communist party newspaper, Pravda marked the event with an article titled "Unquenchable Star," honoring half a million tribesmen ousted from their homes in 1943 on orders of Josef Stalin and deported to Central Asia. The Chechen and Ingush tribes had been charged with mass subversion and collaboration with the wartime enemy, but in the late 1950s they were officially cleared by Nikita S. Khrushchev.

The Pravda article glossed over the deportation and charges against the two tribes which have lived in the Caucasus for centuries. Other groups had been deported under similar charges, including the ethnic Germans from the Volga Valley, the Mongol Kalmyks, the Caucasian Balkars and Karachai and Crimean Tatars.

All these groups regained their civil rights after the death of Stalin but the Volga Germans and the Crimean Tatars were not permitted to return to their homeland.

The autonomous republic set up for the Chechen and Ingush contained the important Grozny oilfields which were a prime target of the German drive into the Caucasus in 1942.

The article honoring the Chechen and Ingush tribes was signed by Semyon S. Apryatkin, a former manager of the Grozny industry who became the party chief of the republic in 1966.

The Pravda article said that the autonomous republic of the Chechen and Ingush was born 50 years ago, but that appeared to be an over simplification. According to Soviet reference books, when the fledgling Soviet regime sought to consolidate its power among Russia's many ethnic minorities, it established the Chechen tribesmen as an autonomous province, an ethnic area which ranked below the status of a republic.

In 1924, the neighboring Ingush tribe was also set up as an autonomous province, and in 1934 the two tribes were merged into a joint autonomous province. They actually won the status of a republic in 1936.

After the wartime deportation of the Chechen and Ingush, the republic was abolished in March 1944 and converted into a Soviet administrative area called Crozny Province.

In his famed speech about the Stalin era made in 1956, Khrushchev denounced the punishment of ethnic groups, and in 1957 the Chechen-Ingush autonomous republic was restored.

Two Groups Exiled After World War II

Chechen and Inguish tribes were accused during Stalin era of World War II of collaboration with German armed forces, but they were later cleared by Nikita Khrushchev.

BOOZE REVOLT THRIVES

By JAMES H. HUSSEY
Canadian Press Correspondent

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — They say Newfoundlanders are born with the taste for liquor and if they are unable to make it themselves, they'll try almost anything to acquire it without paying for it from the Newfoundland government shelves.

The favorite pastime of many an idle man is smuggling the potent booze readily available on the French-owned island of St. Pierre-Miquelon off the province's south coast.

It's only a short boat ride to the best brands of France but since Confederation in 1949, the illegal trade has been checked considerably. However, it has by no means been conquered.

Each year, fishermen and other daring residents are caught in the act of secretly importing what their palates desire. Many are convicted and most fined.

While the illicit trade — the ability to carry it out without prosecution often is considered the mark of a man — is pursued year round, it is usually stepped up during the pre-Christmas season.

EXPECT MORE BOOZE

However, in 1973 there may be more activity during the spring and summer.

The Newfoundland government has made legal liquor more tasily obtainable in recent years through its chain of retail outlets in many outport areas.

But people pay high prices at the local liquor store. The price is not only high, but local connoisseurs claim that brand for brand the provincial products are like pale ale compared to the French booze.

Another price increase is expected early in 1973 and may cause more smuggling.

START FROM BURIN

This is not considered a serious offence in the compact isolated communities during the summer when small fishing boats will be active around the Burin Peninsula.

The peninsula is the favorite starting point for a journey to the St. Pierre suppliers The toe of the Burin boot is only 12 miles from the nearest point on the French islands.

The smuggling is not only carried on by fishermen but also by the increasing number of travellers to St. Pierre.

One story recalls the fishermen who, on being approached by an RCMP vessel, simply dumped his cargo of liquor over the side in bags, weighted down with rock salt and containing a certain amount of cork. After the search, he went on his way and, according to the tale, returned later to retrieve his booty when the salt dissoved and the cork brought the bottles to the surface.

STOP ALL SHIPS

True or not, it illustrates ingenuity designed to preserve the comfort of a cold winter evening.

From time to time, all types of vessels are stopped and searched, and fined if contraband is found. Occasionally, a small fishing boat may be stopped but the smaller craft are elusive.

The smugglers often have help from nature in the summer months, when the murky fogs roll in off the Grand Banks and cover the area in a thick, grey and almost-impenetrable blanket. On such days, it would be tough to find a large steamer let alone a 20-foot motorboat with a muffled engine, heading for one of the many secluded bays and inlets on the peninsula.

So many liquor seizures are made during raids on homes, caves in the cliffs, lobster pounds, underwater caches and other places. Last summer, a police dog sniffed out a large quantity of illegally-imported liquor sunk in a bog at Lamaline.

The trade is not likely to stop soon. As long as there's rum on St. Pierre-Miquelon, some of it will eventually grace the meagre tables of the hardy outporters and even those of the landed gentry.

Burma Marks Rough 25 Years

RANGOON (Reuter) — Burma celebrates 25 years of independence this week, although there is little to celebrate.

The country has been in economic decline since the end of British colonial rule and its army is still battling insurgents.

The road to socialism since military leader Ne Win took over in 1962 has been rough.

But today, even through the government has admitted the failure of its 20-year long-term economic plan after only one year, there is some cause for hope that the next 25 years will be better.

Ne Win, pressing ahead with the second year of the plan, has promised to restore constitutional rule within two years and is moving to end direct military control of the government.

RESIGNED FROM ARMY

The 61-year-old leader and his associates resigned from the army last April and formed the Burma Socialist Programme Party — the only legal political party in the country. Work has started on a constitution which is expected to be adopted in 1974. A national assembly is to be elected next year.

Before Burma won its independence on Jan. 4, 1948, it was one of the richest countries in Asia. Its exports of rice alone brought in $200 million annually during the 1930s.

Last year, with rice sales earning only $65,000 million, Burma had an estimated $62 million deficit. Despite an anticipated 8.7 per cent increase in the gross national product, this year's deficit is expected to be $96 million.

TOPPLES U NU

Ne Win ousted Premier U Nu in a bloodless coup March 2, 1962, but has had to fight supporters of his predecessor as well as secessionist hill tribes ever since.

Today the insurgent groups are splintering and being driven further into remote jungle areas on Burma's borders, with China, Thailand and Laos.

In the last two months, at least 400 members of U Nu's group, which operates from Thailand, have been killed or captured. The former premier is believed to be in Thailand, which granted him asylum in 1969.

A split in U Nu's Anti-Fascist People's Freedom League, which had governed the country for 10 years after being elected in 1948, first brought Ne Win to power as head of a caretaker government.

A general election in 1960 returned U Nu to power but he was removed barely two years later by Ne Win's coup.

Burma's fight for independence began in earnest in 1940 when Gen. Aung San, now considered a national hero, went to China looking for foreign contacts to support an underground movement against the British.

He was unsuccessful in China and went on to Japan, which agreed to train a number of Burmese officers.

Towards the end of the Second World War, the Burmese turned against Japan and Aung San opened negotiations with the British when they returned after the war.

The country finally won its independence in 1948, becoming the 58th member of the United Nations, and now has diplomatic relations with 46 other countries.

Brazil Likely Drug Haven

SAO PAULO (Reuter) — Brazil could become the new haven for international narcotics smuggling, Interpol agents warned Friday.

The Brazilian branch of Interpol said the country's extensive unguarded coastline, empty land pockets and 100 million people make it a prospective centre for international narcotics smuggling.

Interpol said that the recent arrest of a drug ring gang represented only five per cent of the narcotics gangs now active in Brazil.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A 20-year-old Jordan River man was sent to prison for four months definite, eight months indeterminate in provincial court Friday for possession of MDA.

David Reid Lowther pleaded guilty Dec. 22 to possession of seven caps of MDA when arrested Nov. 24.

Defence counsel Douglas Christie contested his client's presentence report on the ground that it contained "generalizations" that were damaging to him. In particular, he attacked a statement that Lowther had allegedly made that "he would shoot any police officer who tried to arrest him again."

Judge Harold Alder, in passing sentence, said "this young man I rather pity because his actions have indicated a total lack of responsibility to himself" and to the rest of society.

★ ★ ★

A 20-year-old man was sentenced to four months definite, five months indeterminate by Judge William Ostler for possession of heroin.

Michael Alfred Petersen, of no fixed address, changed his plea to guilty Dec. 5, on a heroin possession charge dating back to Sept. 23.

On that date he was arrested and found to have two full caps and one half empty cap of heroin in his possession.

Michael Patrick Walsh, 17, of 2626 Blanshard, was given a suspended sentence and placed on six months probation by Ostler for causing a disturbance by being drunk Dec. 5.

Walsh had been apprehended at S. J. Willis high school from which he had been expelled on the day of the offence. He told police he had drunk five bottles of beer.

★ ★ ★

It traffic court Friday, Judge Harold Alder fined Bernard H. Dalziel, 44, of 1050 Queens, $350 for impaired driving. Dalziel was also banned from driving between 8 p.m. and 6 a.m. for a period of three months.

★ ★ ★

In traffic court Thursday, Alder fined John Ferguson, 66, of 4164 Wilkinson $300 on a charge of impaired driving Sept. 11. Ferguson was also banned from driving for two years.

The youth had pleaded guilty to a shoplifting charge and Prosecutor J. W. Anderson said the accused's only previous criminal record was a juvenile one, ending four years ago.

The accused said he thought such a record could not be brought up in adult court.

"You're quite mistaken," said Ostler. "It's admissible. Whilst one is a juvenile, criminal activity is kept from publication to protect the juvenile. But when the juvenile subsequently becomes an adult — and if he continues with criminal conduct — then his behavior as a juvenile becomes very material."

Ostler added that many juveniles hold the belief that their criminal past cannot be held against them, if they persist in crime. The judge termed such an idea "quite erroneous."

The youth was remanded to Jan. 22 for sentence.

Passengers at the Albany airport were delayed while a search apparatus was set up at the entrance to the main boarding area. California's Golden Image Tarnished

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The great tide of migration to California has slowed to a trickle.

For 70 years California's population growth rate was at least twice that of the United States as a whole. It zoomed 53 per cent in the 1940s to 10.5 million; 49 per cent in the 1950s to 15.7 million, and 27 per cent in the 1960s to 20 million.

In 1970, the head count topped 20 million and California elbowed New York out of its historic rank as the most populous state.

But population gains were only one per cent in 1970; 1.3 per cent in 1971 and an estimated 1.2 per cent in 1972.

JOBS MORE SCARCE

Biggest factor in the slowdown of migration to California has been the high rate of unemployment, particularly in the aerospace industry.

"Fifteen years ago our inbound loads topped outbound loads by 4 to 1. Now they're almost equal," says Fred Nason Jr., vice-president of a road transport company.

"When aerospace was going strong, we were bringing in people like crazy, but when the cutback came they were stuck without jobs."

FEAR FIRES, QUAKES

Among those who say they have noted it in their travels is Willard Johnson, national vice-president of Zero Population Growth, an organization attempting to stabilize the population through education and political action:

"I hear people say: 'We used to think we should retire in California but we don't like all the things we hear. We're afraid of earthquakes.'"

"I guess that one of the biggest things I hear is that people are afraid of pollution, particularly in the air," Johnson said. "And there is a fear of traffic congestion by people who would have to drive to work on the freeways."

HEALTH CARE IDEAS SOUGHT

Dr. Richard Foulkes, the man the provincial government has hired to review health care in B.C. and propose improvements, wants the public to join in the job.

Foulkes, former executive director of Royal Columbian Hospital in New Westminster, is director of the Health Security Program project, a special commission established by the new NDP government last fall.

His instructions from Health Minister Dennis Cocke were to examine the whole range of health care services in the province and come up with proposals to improve them.

While the commission is not a government agency, it has access to all government records. Its report is expected on Cocke's desk next fall.

In newspaper ads, Foulkes is now asking the public to participate.

"We want to hear from everybody," he said, "whether they are, or have been, a patient in one of our hospitals, a volunteer worker, a professional in health care or just an ordinary citizen who has some ideas on how we can improve health care in this province.

"There's much to be done and we want all the help we can get. I hope everybody who has something to say will write to us, tell us what changes are needed, make suggestions on how we can improve services or make better use of the facilities we have."

The commission also hopes to get comment on the many services now being provided by private agencies and organizations in health care.

Foulkes stresses that every letter or brief will be studied and held in strict confidence. They should be sent to the Health Security Program project at 1081 Fort St., Victoria, by Feb. 15.

HEROIN SALES NET 7 YEARS

A 27-year-old Vancouver man was sentenced to seven years in jail Friday by Provincial Court Judge F. S. Green on a charge of possession of heroin for the purpose of trafficking.

William Ross Brinthall was termed by Green a man "who has lived for the past 10 years in constant confrontation with the law." Several short periods of incarceration had not shown any effect in rehabilitating the accused, said the judge.

Brinthall was arrested Sept. 19 with five caps of heroin in his possession. He admitted to police that he had already sold five and that he had come to Victoria because he could get $2 a cap more here than in Vancouver, where the then-current price was $14.

At the time of the offence, the accused told police he was not a user of heroin.

Crown prosecutor Mike Hutchinson said the accused "had come here for the venal purpose" of furthering his traffic in heroin. He added that Brinthall's offence had been committed when the accused was already out on probation on another charge.

Environment Studies Lacking

HALIFAX (CP) — Dr. J. S. Nelson, president of the Canadian Society of Environmental Biologists, says the Canadian government has not called for a single environment study at the outset of any major development.

Dr. Nelson suggests biologists should be involved in studies for major developments just like engineers.

He told a conference of the Canadian committee on freshwater fisheries research that his organization proposes to become the environmental conscience for Canada.

"We're upset that anyone can claim to be an ecologist and hire themselves out. We see all sorts of incompetent studies done."

Hans Neu, an engineer-scientist with the Bedford Institute near here, said the environment is becoming another business . . . "a political football."

He told a symposium of about 60 scientists from across Canada that "we have to take a closer look at the environment before we continue exploitation."

Mr. Neu said control of nature has been exerted in the Gulf of St. Lawrence by the growing number of hydroelectric power dams.

By holding back the natural springtime flow of river water, he said, the mixture of fresh and salt water in the gulf was altered. Nutrients were reduced, the water temperature, marine life and climate changed.

Spring run-off in the gulf was vital but that the runoff now was largely regulated for power purposes.

He called on the scientists to find ways of determining the total cost to the environment of massive engineering projects.

"I place a lot of these responsibilities on your doorstep . . . to advise government agencies what shall be done to cause the least damage."

Golda Meir's Paris Trip Labelled Ill-Timed

PARIS (Reuter) — A decision by Israeli Premier Golda Meir to attend the Socialist International congress here this month has stirred a political storm in France, with the Gaullist newspaper La Nation branding it an ill-timed move.

Although the Israeli embassy here was reported to have advised against the trip, Mrs. Meir will arrive in the midst of an election campaign battle between the governing Gaullists and a left-wing coalition of Socialists and Communists.

The Socialist International is a loose organization of Democratic Labor and Socialist parties whose avowed aim is to unify the policies and activities of its affiliates around the world.

An additional problem posed by the congress and Mrs. Meir's presence is the risk of a revival of the hostility that characterized Franco-Israeli relations following the 1967 Arab-Israeli war.

The late Gen. Charles de Gaulle then backed closer relations with the Arab nations. Franco-Israeli relations have since been cool but correct, with France modifying its stance somewhat under President Georges Pompidou.

There has been no official reaction from the French government to Mrs. Meir's decision as vice-president of the Socialist International to visit here Jan. 13 and 14, but La Nation was categorical about the visit:

"It is evident that leaders who feel they must respond to an invitation by an opposition party during an electoral period should not expect to find the least welcome in France," it said in an editorial.

In another editorial, the paper also criticized the government leaders of Austria, Sweden and Denmark for agreeing to attend the congress.

"These heads of governments risk jeopardizing relations between their countries and France," La Nation said.

Courts Rule Out Clamp-Down Law

NEW YORK (AP) — The presiding justices of New York City's two appellate division departments say Governor Nelson A. Rockefeller's new drug law proposals would be impossible to implement in the courts.

Rockefeller has advocated mandatory life sentences without parole or plea bargaining for convicted drug sellers and for addicts who commit violent crimes while under the influence of drugs.

The two judges agreed Friday that these laws would result in such a proliferation of trials that the courts would be hopelessly tied up.

"I don't see how the courts could function at all," said Justice Harold A. Stevens.

"You can be sure that everyone arrested for sale of drugs is going to demand a trial, because he has nothing to lose," Stevens said. "And they might as well prepare to build many, many more courts and many more jails."

Justice Samuel Rabin said if all defendants in drug sale cases had to be tried, "we'd have to multiply by many, judges, non-judicial personnel, ancillary personnel.

"And as a practical matter, I don't think that it's presently within the realm of possibilities."

The two judges said a distinction should be made between small-time addict-pushers and major drug dealers.

Service Marks Unity

The regular 11 a.m. Sunday service at Metropolitan United Church will be part of a North American communion Sunday, the initial phase of a year-long Launch Key-73 simultaneous observance program spanning Canada and the United States.

Key-73 will be a series of events and evangelism programs throughout the year which will involve 300,000 local congregations and 100 million Christians belonging to 150 denominations and Christian groups.

New members to Metropolitan will receive their first communion at Sunday's service.

Following the service there will be lunch in Pendray Hall, and at 1 p.m. viewing of a special television program called Faith in Action, which will be seen simulataneously all over North America, and will be shown locally on Channels 6 and 8.

School Renovation Urged

A parents' group actually wants Greater Victoria school board to spend less on its local school than the board plans.

Lampson St. elementary school, long notorious for its leaky ceilings, blown fuses and Edwardian boys' toilets with no doors, should be overhauled, and not replaced with a modern-style "box", says the parents' auxiliary.

"The present school, excepting the annex, is sound. The classrooms in the main building are large and light and airy. Better in many ways than many new schools have. The site is attractive. A new school would cost many thousands more than the renovations suggested," says a letter from the auxiliary committee to parents.

The letter invites parents to a meeting Thursday, when trustees will be shown around the building.

The auxiliary wants a new gymnasium for the school, a complete overhaul on the electrical system, and updating of the washroom facilities.

In 1966 the school board decided to phase out the school within the next decade, but has taken no action since then. No major renovations have been carried out on the school in the period.

RESCUED WHALE STRONGER, HEADED FOR N.Y. AQUARIUM

BEACH HAVEN, N.J. (UPI) — A team of marine biologists monitored the breathing of a rare injured whale second by second Friday and said the mammal's chances of survival seemed good.

Dr. Howard Winn, a University of Rhode Island professor, said the 900-pound whale, dubbed Hope, was to be carried in a foam sling inside a 24-foot enclosed van up the Garden State Parkway from a private salt-water pool here to the Coney Island aquarium of the New York Zoological Society.

During the three-hour trip, eight men were to constantly wet the whale with buckets of water.

The 12-foot whale, believed to be a member of the rare "True's Beaked" species, was found Wednesday unconscious on a beach after it had smashed into a rock jetty. A sling and winch was used to hoist the animal into a pickup truck for transfer to the pool.

"It's so rare, we don't even know if it's an endangered species," Winn said while awaiting the truck from New York. "It's breathing normally. At this point, it looks good."

Winn and other marine biologists smeared lanolin ointment onto Hope to prevent sunburn. A series of antibiotic injections and a solution of dextrose, distilled water and vitamins were also administered.

Dr. James Mead, a mammals expert from the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, said the whale passed the "magic hour" at noon Friday with its breathing "steadied out."

He said Hope had undergone "trauma and shock" much as humans do and that the 48 hours after discovery were considered the crucial period.

Winn said that if the mammal is definitely identified as a True's Beaked Whale, it presumably would be the only type of its species in captivity.

The scientists said individuals of the species had been sighted around New Zealand but only four or five of its kind had been studied and all those were dead.

Meade said he thought the mammal was male, but Winn disagreed. Cell samples were taken for a chromosome test to determine Hope's sex.

Fischer-Spassky Fever Still Grips Montreal

By JOSEPH MacSWEEN

MONTREAL (CP) — The chess fever that spread from Iceland last summer is still running high here—with promoters doing their best to keep it so.

Bernard Ouimet, president of the Montreal Chess League, said the scale of new interest —particularly among French-speaking citizens—and commercial sponsorship is almost unbelievable to veterans of past unsung tournaments in cramped basements.

"The whole thing would have been unthinkable not so long ago," said the 29-year-old insurance actuary. "What is new is that we are able to open doors that were closed before."

The world chess championships in Reykjavik, Iceland, caught the public imagination in an unprecedented manner. The games between American Bobby Fischer, the victor, and Russian Boris Spassky, the defending champion, came over the media like dam busters. Suddenly commercial sponsorship, hitherto invisible, became available for local chess.

Ouimet advocates alert public relations and promotion to ensure that the intellectually stimulating game of pawns, kings, queens and knights will have a good future in Canada.

FORM OWN FIRM

He said an example of business potential has been provided by aptly-named Bryan M. Knight, 33, and Douglas R. Long, 28, who founded Chess Nut Enterprises (Le Fou des Echecs Enterprises) several months ago.

And Knight, interviewed on his return from a business trip to his native England, told a reporter:

Chess Nut is also the title of a 15-page catalogue distributed across Canada and featuring, like the boutique, such supplies as literature, chess clocks and score sheets as well as sets and boards.

The happy-warrior partners —old friends, university graduates and avowed chess freaks—enjoy exploiting offbeat and spinoff opportunities, their latest venture being Pawnography, a 72-page book of cartoons touted, at $1.25, as an ideal gift for broad-minded chess people.

"We dreamed up all the ideas for the cartoons on one mad night," Long confided. "We touch on some of the do's and don't of chess. For instance, spectators—especially beautiful spectators—leaning over a chess board can be terribly distracting, you know."

Janice Logan, the comely 24-year-old artist who did the sketches, confessed with a smile that initially she felt some of the cartoon ideas were a trifle risque "and so did my mother."

HAS TOPICAL INTEREST

"But we decided they were ok and, in fact, I was amazed that the ancient game of chess relates so well to anything topical—religion, sex, pawns in society and other things," said the native of Columbus, O., and graduate in fine arts from Ohio State University.

Knight and Long found a vacuum in some aspects of the chess industry and have been so busy they have little time to play the game.

"But some of the sets are irresistible," said Knight. "We hide them until we have a chance to try them out."

Of the over-all Montreal picture, Ouimet reported that for some time the league under his presidency had been trying to correct a traditional lack of good French-language literature and material. The interest stirred by the world tournament had been of immense help.

Some 225 contestants turned up for the opening of the Montreal chess championships, compared with roughly 85 in other years. Scores of spectators included citizens of 10 and 12 years of age.

Ouimet said a Canadian participation record may well have been set when 750 persons took part in Quebec championships conducted by the French-language newspaper, La Presse.

Dispute Halts Kelowna Mail

KELOWNA, B.C. (CP) — Mail service came to a halt here Friday after a walkout by members of the Canadian Postal Workers Union in a dispute over shift changes.

The walkout shut down postal operations at midnight Thursday and mail delivery stopping Friday when 35 letter carriers refused to cross picket lines set up by 15 inside workers.

In a statement, Kelowna Postmaster John Arcand said management was "ready to consult with the unions the moment employees return to work."

The local dispute, which precipitated a walkout at 2 p.m. Thursday by four members of the afternoon shift, revolved around a change in work shift time from noon to 2:30 and 3 p.m.

He said the change in time was "made necessary" to ensure that all mail posted in the Kelowna area is processed for the first available dispatch or next-day delivery in the city.

Quake Aids Strongman

By ERNESTO MENDOZA

MANAGUA (Reuter) — Gen. Anastacio Somoza, heir of a dynasty that has ruled Nicaragua for 35 years, emerges stronger than before after the earthquake that devastated Managua.

The 47-year-old general, once a cadet at the United States Military Academy at West Point, N.Y., personally handled relief efforts, barely sleeping for days on end.

His white-walled villa in an old hacienda overlooking the city became headquarters both for the relief operations and for the 6,000-man national guard which he commands.

The earthquake shattered the facade of Nicaragua's ruling triumvirate and showed who really runs the country of two million people.

Somoza, elected president in 1967, stepped down last May in favor of a three-man junta chosen by the constituent assembly but he retained control of the national guard, which is Nicaragua's combined police and army.

Under martial law, declared immediately after the earthquake, Somoza assumed emergency powers and his voice can be heard daily on the radio, exhorting the people to maintain order and be patient.

This will not be easily forgotten when the presidential election is held next September.

Wearing a khaki uniform, the tall bespectacled general confers until the early hours with relief aid officials.

His wife Hope, a slender, attractive woman who speaks fluent English with an American accent, holds her own meetings as chairman of the national relief and social welfare committee.

The Somozas are used to running things. Somoza is the third of the dynasty to govern Nicaragua since his late father Anastasio, commonly known as Tacho, seized power and the presidency in 1937.

Tacho ruled Nicaragua until he was assassinated in 1958. He was succeeded by his elder son Luis, who governed until 1963, when he was succeeded in turn by an interim president widely regarded as a Somoza puppet.

Citizens Burn

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (UPI) — A plan to burn 40 acres of underbrush that hide a haven for "sex parties and pot parties" near two schools was cancelled Friday on the insistence of irate citizens.

A police department plan had called for "controlled burning" of the underbrush, but as word spread through the community citizens were left with the impression that everything on the tract was to be burned, including the trees.

"Never in anybody's wildest imagination was it in anybody's mind to just go out there and burn the whole damn thing," said Jack Newsome, Mayor Hans Tanzler's press aide.

District forester Frank Hill said his fire co-ordinator determined the area could be burned off without harming the growing trees.

Undersheriff D. K. Brown said school officials and area residents had complained of seeing "sex parties and pot parties" in the wooded area near Southside Junior High School and Greenfield Elementary School.

FUNDS WANTED

Oxfam of Casada, which rushed to the earthquake disaster in Managua, Nicaragua with an immediate grant of $20,000 for emergency relief, is asking Canadians to send cash donations so food and medical supplies can continue to flow into the shattered country.

Oxfam Field Director David Carter said an estimated 80,000 to 120,000 people remain is the stricken city, thousands of them injured, and the capital has been declared an epidemic area.

Rice, lard, sugar, beans, flour and dehydrated meats are urgently needed along with medical supplies and personsel to combat the spreading disease.

Contributions can be sent locally to Dr. Victor Rogers, 1777 Hollywood Crescent or directly to Oxfam, 97 Eglinton Ave. East, Toronto 12, Ont.

HOW HYPNOSIS HELPS

By George W. Knox, Ph.D. Certified Psychologist

New Year's Resolutions helped by Self-Hypnosis

Many people make New Year's Resolutions, unfortunately, not so many people are able to keep their resolutions.

By applying some of the basic principles of self-hypnosis, a person can stand a much better chance of keeping his new resolutions.

Once the resolution is made you do not need to think about it except for a few moments each day, using those few minutes that will be most effective in programming the new resolution into the deeper parts of the mind.

Since the old behaviour patterns have often been well consolidated through years of use and the new patterns are just being formulated it is well to continue the suggestive procedures over a period of time.

It frequently happens that a person will keep his new resolution until something disturbing happens and he then reverts to the older more established but less desirable behaviour pattern. This is the critical point. Too often the awareness of not having kept the resolution, reinforced by whatever disturbed the person, causes self-disgust and thereby a give-up on the resolution.

On the other hand, if one can but realize that this is a frequent and understandable situation of the way the normal mind works, the self-blame can be diminished or alleviated and one can return to following the resolution with reinforcement by the self-hypnosis procedures.

Ottawa Gallery To Display Louvre Pieces

By JAMES NELSON

OTTAWA (CP) — Scores of naked little boys, bevies of nude women of heroic stature and squads of scantily-veiled damsels of the simpering kind will come to Ottawa this spring.

But don't be alarmed. They're not at all the naughty sort, and before you run for blankets or maple leaves to cover them up, you should know it's all a display of 16th-century French art.

One of the most important collections of paintings, drawings, tapestries, sculptures and royal armor ever assembled by the Louvre in Paris will be shown at the National Gallery of Canada, starting March 2.

Outside, the snows of winter will still be swirling in the streets. But inside, some of the finest—and nakedest—examples of cupids, putti, amorini, angels and fairies will disport themselves in the School of Fontainebleau exhibit.

* * *

Fontainebleau, the playground of kings, was the royal palace of Francis I and his successors just outside Paris where French art was encouraged early in the 1500s. Francis brought Italian artists there to decorate the sumptuous chateau and encourage French artists.

Much of the life of the French court will be reflected in the exhibit, the gallery says. Parade armor, battle shields, books and ceramics will be included along with paintings, drawings and tapestries.

The collection was assembled and shown at the Louvre last winter. This is to be its only showing outside France. The Louvre normally is reluctant to loan its works abroad. Arrangements for this showing result from a Franco-Canadian cultural exchange agreement.

The period covered is from 1528 to 1610—from the time of Francis I who was king of France when Jacques Cartier first came to Canada, to Henry IV, who was king when Champlain founded Quebec in 1608.

In art history, it was the beginning of mannerism and the forerunner of the baroque. It was a time of heroic depiction of historical and mythological events, graced by cherubic youngsters and long-limbed young ladies.

Coca-Cola and Coconut Clash in Micronesia

SAIPAN, Micronesia (AP) — An oceanful of movie-set islands held together by a two-plane airline and $60 million yearly from Washington is talking about independence from the United States.

Micronesia, starting west of Hawaii and sprawling over the Pacific toward Asia, was entrusted to the United States in 1947 after American forces wrested it from Japan, island by island.

The 2,100 islands making up the area have a population of 107,000 spread over three million square miles of ocean.

Culturally, there are nine distinct languages and backgrounds, from Yap, where women cover their thighs and bare their breasts, to Kwajalein, where everyone covers the ears because of missile firing.

"We were a happy, simple people but now we have a clash between Coca-Cola and the coconut," said Carl Heine, a senior administrator from the Marshall Islands. "And we've passed the point of no return."

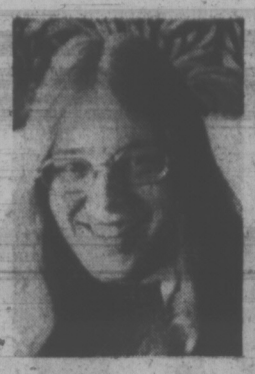
Under the United Nations mandate, Washington was supposed to develop the islands, prepare them for autonomy and then turn them loose.

Micronesian and American negotiators have met five times to discuss the islands' future status. Americans came to the September session in Hawaii prepared for "free association," a form of self-rule in which Washington would handle defence and foreign affairs and have its pick of military land.

But the Micronesians suddenly asked for complete independence, and the Americans went back for instructions. They are to meet again later this month.

For years, legislators and officials in Washington have paid little attention to the islands.

Now, with the United Nations mandate nearing its end, at least American and Micronesia leaders are a little more aware of each other's presence.



Two new appointments have been made at Victoria's YM-YWCA youth department Janet Hogan (above), a graduate of Carleton University and long-time member of Moncton YMCA, is the new assistant youth director. Assistant P. E. director, youth, will be David Graham (below), who has a B.A. in psychology and a B.P.E. and was first involved with the Y in 1971 in an Ontario detached youth program.

PERSPECTIVES AND PREJUDICES

Peppermint Patty Faith

By REV. J. A. DAVIDSON

Since the end of the Second World War the churches and synagogues of North America have enjoyed unprecedented prestige and prosperity. Things may have slipped a little lately, but, on the whole, institutional religion has never had it so good.

But just how significant, how consequential, has the religious boom been? In my blacker moments I sometimes think that the most appropriate symbol for much of the religion of our time is the peppermint patty — thin, sweet, and gooey.

A brilliant analysis of the religious scene in North America was made a few years ago by the Jewish scholar, Will Herberg. It was published under the title, Protestant, Catholic, Jew.

Dr. Herberg detected in Roman Catholicism and in Protestantism and in Judaism tendencies to dilute the specifics of biblical faith, to moderate challenge, to evade fundamental commitment. He saw religion today proclaiming a vague, flabby "faith in faith", a cozy kind of pious respectability which is in reality simply a nice frosting on our North American way of life.

Herberg summed up in this way: "What should reach down to the core of existence, shattering and renewing, merely skims the surface of life, and yet succeeds in generating the sincere feeling of being religious. Religion thus becomes a kind of protection the self throws up against the radical demands of faith."

Jews and Christians have their moral roots in the teaching and in the passion of the ancient Hebrew prophets. Jewish ethics and Christian ethics each has its own special emphasis and dynamic — but they do share the prophetic moral perspective, a common perspective on man under God. The circumstances of life today challenge Jews and Christians to get away from the superficialities of so much of their religious practice and to let loose in the whole of society the creative forces which are in their moral heritage.

Dr. Herberg closed his book with this splendid affirmation of biblical faith: "God is surely capable of turning even the intractibilities and follies of religion into an instrument of His redemptive purpose." I offer that as a antidote to our fashionable peppermint-patty-ism in religion.

Royal Visit Confirmed

LONDON (Reuter) — The Queen will visit Canada twice during the summer of this year, Buckingham Palace confirmed Friday.

A palace spokesman said the Queen would visit Ottawa during the Commonwealth heads of government conference August 2-10, following an invitation from Prime Minister Trudeau.

The spokesman said that since the conference dates will not interfere with other arrangements, the Queen would go to Ottawa "for some part of the conference."

It was announced earlier she will pay a 10-day visit which will take her to centennary celebrations in Prince Edward Island and to Kingston, Ont., from June 25 to July 5.

Trudeau extended his invitation to the Queen to visit Ottawa during the conference when he was in Britain early last month. He said she had accepted the invitation in principle although dates of the conference had not then been set.

The palace spokesman said Friday she had then accepted in principle "if the dates were convenient."

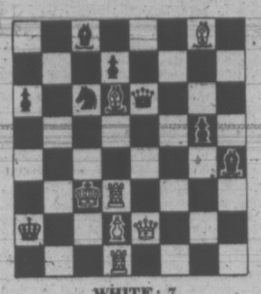
CHESS MASTER

By GEORGE KOLTANOWSKI
International Chess Master

PROBLEM
By L. Lindner, Hungary
BLACK: 8



WHITE: 7
White to play and mate in two moves. Solution below.

ANAPOLY KARPOV MAY BE A NEW ALEKHINE

Guest Column by Sir Harry Golombek

Even by the time the recently concluded Church's International Torunament in San Antonio was half done, it had become abudantly evident that a new and powerful force had entered international chess. Near halfway point, the 21-year-old Russian Grandmaster Anapoly Karpov had a score of five points out of six.

This was indeed an impressive total, and while it must be admitted that his wins at that point had been achieved mostly against the weaker players in the tournament, he had done extraordinarily well in having no losses and only two draws, one of them with his fellow Russian, ex-World Champion Tigran Petrosian, the other with the formidable Bent Larsen of Denmark.

Young Anapol is a very pleasant, almost retiring character who nonethelesss, has a nice sense of fun appropriate to his age. Away from the board, this small, neat youngster hardly has the air of a grandmaster. But at the chess board, he is quite a different person — forceful, accurate and a classical player in the best sense of the word. If the present World Champion reminds one, insofar as style of play is concerned, very much of Capablanca, then Karpov seems to me almost a second young Alekhine. Should he succeed in making his way through the Interzonal and the Candidates as far as a match with Bobby Fischer in 1975, then it will be fascinating to witness the contest between these two very different types of player.

Playing with the Black pieces againt Petrosian is no easy task, as many a player (including me) has found to his cost; but here is how, with a blend of subtlety and force, the young Russian Grandmaster deals adequately, and almost successfully, in the seventh round of the tournament with his great adversary. He does not quite manage to bring off a win but, make no mistake, this was a real fighting game.

WHITE: Petrosian
BLACK: Karpov

Drawn

(a) Petrosian's favorite method of dealing with the Queen's Indian and one which demands the utmost accuracy on Black's part if he wishes to avoid losing ground in the centre.

(b) The right reaction; Black does not give White time to assert any control over the centre but strikes there himself at once.

(c) Not relishing the prospect of a hanging pawn complex after 10. KPOxP, PxP; 11. PxP.

(d) An aggressive move that aims at counter-attack by PO-QN4. Simply 11. N-B3; 12. NxN, BxN; 13. B-K2 would lead to an early draw.

(e) An ingenious method of developing his queen-side which the average player should find instructive.

(f) Better than 16. P-N5; 17. QN-K2, when White will be able to occupy the QB file.

(g) A strong move that threatens QN-Q2, followed by P-K4; hence White's next move.

(h) This too vigorously played; he threatens to give White badly doubled pawns by 29. PxP.

(i) Ther position is now level; White's weakness on QN3 is counter-balanced by the superior position of his King and well-placed Knight on Q4.

'72 Bad Year for Air Fatalities

WASHINGTON (WP) — Three Major airline accidents in the last month of 1972 have turned what could have been the safest year in U.S. airline travel into only a poor third in avoiding passenger fatalities.

Federal officials said Tuesday 163 passengers died in accidents involving regularly scheduled U.S airlines in 1972. This was above the airlines' best year, 1970, when 118 passengers died, and the second best year, 1969, when 132 passengers died.

Yet, until Dec. 8 only 16 passengers had died in accidents involving the scheduled airlines. Then two crashes in Chicago and one near Miami in the space of 21 days added 147 passengers to the death toll, federal officials said.

"Without those three recent accidents, it would have been a hell of a year (for airline safety)" said Brad Dunbar, a spokesman for the National Transportation Safety Board.

The safety board, an independent agency responsible for determining the probable cause of all non-military aircraft accidents in this country, now has 46 investigators at work examining the three December crashes that, including crew deaths, took a total of 157 lives.

Air fatality figures compiled by the safety board show that 1972's total for airline passenger deaths is still far below the peak years — 336 deaths in 1960 and 303 deaths in 1968. And slightly less than 1971's total of 174 passenger deaths.

According to estimates by Federal Aviation Administration and Civil Aeronautics Board officials, the number of flight hours logged by U.S. airlines in 1972 increased slightly over 1971's total of 6 million hours, this means the number of airline deaths compared to flying time, one measure of airline safety, dropped by a small fraction.

Three crashes that resulted in almost all of the year's passenger deaths occurred while airplanes were on their approaches to land at airports.

These accidents came despite renewed efforts by safety board officials to warn pilots of the dangers of approaches and landings in winter weather. Dunbar said better training of pilots and more sophisticated electronic guidance equipment at airports offer the best hope for further reductions in the accident rate.

BATTLE OF BRITAIN — VETERAN HONORED

A Battle of Britain poignard, marking the 25th anniversary of the Battle of Britain was presented to Col. Beverley Christmas by Rear-Admiral R. H. Leir at a dinner in his honor Friday night.

Christmas, who was the last serving member of the Canadian armed forces who flew in the Battle of Britain, retired as deputy base commander Friday.

The poignard was shipped to Esquimalt by Canadian armed forces personnel serving on the Canadian Defence liaison staff in London.

FIRST CLINIC TUESDAY

North Development Scheme Endorsed

The Greater Victoria Council of Churches has endorsed a scheme by former Saanich fireman Dale Kuster to develop Canada's North through a society of communes.

The 27-year-old Kuster says he has about 300 local people in his group who hope eventually to open up a chain of communities in the Canadian North.

In a letter to Prime Minister Trudeau, Rev. Michael T. O'Connell, President of the Council of Churches, recommended "that the proposals of Mr. Kuster and those working with him, be given serious consideration by qualified persons who have experience in the North."

"We don't want welfare," Kuster said Friday. "And if we just get government grants will still be on the government dole."

So Kuster's plan is for his group to set up a credit union and from there to go on to forming a record company, a land holding company and a movie company.

Money raised through these co-operative efforts could be channeled in, through individuals, to establishng northern communities.

Kuster says he has the verbal support of a number of government figures but no financial backing yet.

"We want to try to show all the unhappy young people on welfare and turning to drugs that there is a peaceful, community solution to their problems," Kuster said. "It's a matter of recycling natural and human resources."

Inflation Crisis 'Not Improving'

By The Canadian Institute Of Public Opinion

Despite assurances from Government officials and some financial experts, the great majority of Canadians believe that the inflation crises facing this country is not improving. Whether it is the nation as a whole, or any of the main occupational segments almost 8 in ten adults (78 per cent) hold this view — six times the proportion who think that the situation is better (13 per cent). It is a controversy on which practically every one has an opinion to give, with less than one in ten unable to answer.

There is a solidarity of opinion on the inflation problem, fairly unique in opinion research, shown by the public, whether it is in the ranks of executive and professionals, sales and clerical forces, skilled and unskilled labor, or on the farms. Differences in attitudes between all of them are not significant.

The study was conducted on October 20-21, with a random sample of 671 adults, in at-home, personal interviews. A sample of this size produces results accurate within a 4 percentage point margin of error, 19 out of 20 times.

The question:

"In general what do you think about the problem of inflation — do you think the situation is improving or not?"

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was radiant in a contemporary gown with an old world look in high neckline, and bishop sleeves, ruffled hem with matching sweep flounce. Her beautifully embroidered illusion veil flowed down into a long train. She carried a bouquet of flame carnations, stephanotis and tiny wood roses. The Maid of Honour was Miss Susan Turner, sister of the groom; the brides-maids were Susan Bursey, and Gail Turner. All wore identical floor-length Canadian red gowns and winter white picture hats with red velvet ribbons to accent the gowns. They carried umbrella bouquets of white carnations, red roses and stephanotis with streamers, also matching the dresses. The best man was Rick Turner, brother of the groom. Ushers were Gordon Lloyd and Brian Turner.

A buffet reception followed at the home of the bride's parents. Mr. Duncan Lorimer special friend and one time principal of the happy couple, proposed the toast. The three tiered wedding cake made by the groom's mother was beautifully decorated in pink and white topped by two white doves holding wedding rings.

Out of town guests included Mr. and Mrs. Bruce MacFadyen, Ross and Donna, Ganges, S.S.I., B.C.; Mrs. R. A. Cummings, Nanaimo, B.C.; Miss Mary Scholey, Bamfield, B.C.; Mr. Randy Crane, Vancouver; Miss Penny Fisher, Fullers Lake, B.C. A telegram was read by Rick Turner from Mr. and Mrs. H. Watker of Welland, Ontario, (aunt and uncle of the groom).

(Sandy) Wotherspoon. Canon C. Bishop officiated.

The bride, dressed in a floor-length gown of white crepe and carrying a bouquet of red rosebuds, was given in marriage by Mr. Roy Johnson. The maid of honor, Miss Linda Johnson, wore a gown of green crepe and carried yellow and bronze mums. Mr. Sukhdev S. (Dave) Auila attended as best man. Given in marriage by her father, the bride was attended by the groom's sister Mrs. Criena Henly and the bride's sister Miss Mary Burgess. Mr. Edward Henly, the groom's brother-in-law, was best man, and Mr. John Corkill ushered the guests.

9 IN MEMORIAM

ATKIN — Loving memory of our dear and only daughter Iris, 1916-1969.
Peacefully by thy rest dear Iris,
It is sweet to breathe thy name;

WILLIAMS — In memory of my mother Caroline Williams, passed away Jan. 6, 1972.
Fading light dims the sight
Gleaming bright from afar
Dawning nigh falls the night.
Day is done, gone the sun
From the lake, from the hills
From the sky, All is well.
Safely rest. Good is nigh.

DISASTER SALE
A man-made disaster has occurred on Galiano Island.
Taking the form of old cars, old shacks and old bushes, this calamity is being sold at a price which is almost a disaster in itself.
The price of $28,000 is so low you can afford to rectify what's wrong and turn this 6.6 acre property into a real asset.
There are good points too, why not call and find out about them?

Model Parliament Puts Jobs At Top of Priorities List

One million new jobs and government dental insurance schemes were promised by the Liberal minority government today as the sixth annual University of Victoria model parliament opened.

The speech from the throne, read by Prof. Alfred Loft as "governor-general," outlined measures aimed at social reform and alleviating unemployment which won the grudging approval of the New Democratic Party and Progressive Conservative opposition.

The 21 Liberals, led by fourth-year history student Dolly Marks, promised to help finance provincial dental insurance plans and also to encourage tuition assistance in the form of bursaries for dental students.

The government promised to fight unemployment by making the Local Initiatives Program a permanent year-round scheme, and by expanding the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

They introduced a bill creating an on-going task force to examine food prices in Canada, and another creating an Old Age Pension Review Board which would ensure pensions keep pace with the rising cost of living.

Both the New Democrats (17 seats) and the Progressive Conservatives (12 seats) claimed the government had stolen their ideas.

"We find the speech from the throne somewhat amusing and somewhat complimentary," said Leader of the Opposition Ron Armstrong, who said it was all NDP policy.

And John McVie, Progressive Conservative leader, said: "Much of the legislation in the throne speech seems to be catering to our party."

The model parliament Liberals don't need to worry about being defeated by a non-confidence motion. Standard procedure is to bring the government down only at the end of the weekend session at 5 p.m. Sunday.

The government introduced bills to create a permanent Speaker chosen from among the MPs, and to force political parties to disclose the source of their election funds.

"I know personally that none of my members have anything to hide," said Prime Minister Marks.

Marks said she would not reintroduce the War Measures Act, which was repealed by last year's minority NDP government. She also refused to re-introduce an act which last year abolished the Senate, but subsequently died when the Senate voted against it.

Sittings of the parliament in the provincial legislative chamber go on from 7 to 10 tonight, and Sunday from 9:30 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. and from 2 to 5 p.m., and are open to the public.

Community Schools Set

Two provincial cabinet ministers will introduce enabling legislation at the next legislative session designed to help Greater Victoria — and any other — school board create a community school.

"At present restrictive clauses in both the Public Schools and the Municipal Acts prevent co-operation in forming a school integrated with municipal services in the same plant," board vice-chairman Walter Donald said today.

"As a result of our one-hour meeting with Eileen Dailly and Jim Lorimer on Friday afternoon we now have assurances that the ministers will make enabling legislation," he said.

The legislature opens Jan. 25.

Greater Victoria school board is planning a community school for Saanich at Burnside and Acorn. Municipal facilities such as a swimming pool or a theatre may be housed in the same unit as a modern secondary school.

Pay Next Week For Yule Posties

Some of them have been getting impatient.

Brad Turnquist, 3941 Winton St., said he was laid off Dec. 27 and told he would receive his cheque the first week in January.

"Now they said I may get paid by the middle of next week. This is an awful long time for a big corporation like the government to make out pay cheques."

Ken Stofer, information officer for the Victoria post office, said today that temporary employees who started work before Dec. 10 got an interim paycheque Dec. 15.

Each year there are problems processing pay for people on certain shifts, he said. One reason for the "slight delay" this year is a new procedure has been introdueed for processing the pay for temporary help.

The pay cheques are made up in Vancouver. While the post office isn't happy about people having to wait, the staff handling the job is doing the best it can "and we don't think the delay has been too unreasonable."

Few Bring Yule Trees

By 11:30 a.me about 60 trees from private citizens and 400 unsold firs from a retail outlet had been brought in to the recycling depot at 4026 Borden St.

As a trial project, all the trees will be put through a chipper and shredded into coarse sawdust to be given away to anyone who wants it for their garden.

Spokesman David Jackman said if more trees come in today they may continue the project Monday.

Trees can be brought in until 5 p.m. today and anyone wishing free sawdust may pick it up after 3 p.m. and during next week.

City Escapes Mail Backlog

The Vancouver mail includes some from Eastern Canada dating back to Dec. 28 and 29 and a spokesman there said Friday the delay in distribution resulted largely from bad weather in the east last week.

In Victoria a post office spokesman said today there are several thousand first class letters which have come in late but mail handling is "in quite good shape."

Light Snow Possible On Sunday

Cloudy weather moving over Greater Victoria tonight could result in a light snowfall by Sunday morning.

The weather office said today a system over the Alaska Panhandle is growing and moving south more rapidly than earlier anticipated.

While cloud cover is expected to moderate temperatures a little, overnight lows are still expected to range between 20 and 25. They dipped to between 18 and 22 at sunrise today.

Boy, 9, Dies From Injuries

Paul Beaudray, 3838 Epsom, was walking to Braefoot Elementary Wednesday morning when the accident occurred on Cedar Hill Road near Epsom Drive. The car was driven by Betty Tupper, 3210 Millgrove.

Coroner Edmond St. Jorre said he will decide on an inquest date after talking with Saanich police.

Golf Stars Raise Questions

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Some of golf's great names are having second thoughts about the new, one-half million dollar tournament, the world's richest, that has been announced for play this fall.

While most of the touring pros, were busily re-arranging their scheduled to include the $500,000 World Open at Pinehurst, N.C., in November, Jack Nicklaus, Lee Trevino and Arnold Palmer were taking long, thoughtful looks at the 144-hole, two-week affair.

All three prefaced their remarks with the disclaimer that they really don't know that much about it yet.

But all raised some questions.

"The only thing that bothers me about it," said Palmer, a 43-year-old veteran, "is that when and if the tournament folds, that hurts the game.

"We had the same thing a couple of years ago in the DowJones. It lasted just one year and folded. That hurts."

SPONSOR SUFFERS

The Dow-Jones, played in New Jersey in 1970, was the previous richest event in the United States, offering a total purse of $300,000 and $60,000 to the winner.

The sponsoring financial firm was reported to have lost upward of $250,000.

The dates for the World Open are Nov. 8-18, with the eight-round event divided into two 72-hole sections in the tiny resort community in the Carolina sandhills.

"November?" Trevino asked. "They might lose me.

"I don't want to play in November. It's too cold . . .

"November isn't good. You're fighting football, and hockey, and basketball. The fans have had 10 months of golf.

"May would be the time. Look at Greensboro (the early-season Greensboro Open, which annually draws some of the biggest galleries of any event for the year). That's when they're starved for golf."

INTEREST WANES

Nicklaus, the 1972 player of the year and winner of a record $320,000 in prize money, also mentioned the conflict with football and the possibility of difficulties with television.

And he brought up some other points.

"At 144 holes, that's fine for the better players," he said. "The more holes you play, the more chance the good player has.

"But what happens if you come up to the last, or even the next to last round, with somebody leading by 20 strokes? How much interest is there going to be then?

"And I'm not too sure about a two-week tournament. If you look at it realistically, it's two $250,000 tournaments played back to back. I'm not knocking it. Don't get me wrong. But I think you have to look at it realistically."

Most of the touring pros expressed amazement, even disbelief when the huge prize, including $100,000 to the winner, was announced.

Pro Stars On Aussie Cup Squad

Rosewall, Dibley and Case will not be able to play against Japan, Australia's first opponent, or India, the second scheduled opponent, because of prior commitments, non-playing captain Neale Fraser said.

Rosewall Wins; Mal Anderson Nips Newcombe

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Ken Rosewall and Mal Anderson, veteran Australians, each rallied from first-set losses and scored semi-final victories today in the $19,000 New South Wales open tennis championships.

Rosewall, 38, overcame Geoff Masters of Australia, while Anderson, 37, upset John Newcombe, another Australian, 5-7, 6-4, 6-4, 6-4.

Meanwhile, Margaret Smith Court of Australia advanced to the women's final against Evonne Goolagong, also of Australia, with a 4-6, 6-0, 9-7 triumph over Karen Krantzcke.

Road Racing Teams Plead to Operators

LONDON (AP) — The major Grand Prix road racing teams announced Tuesday they would negotiate prize money with individual circuit operators around the world in a bid to break a deadlock which threatens the 1973 championships.

The teams said they have told Grand Prix International, a circuit owners organization, that its terms for staging world championship races were unacceptable, but that the teams would negotiate privately with individual circuit operators.

The teams want $153,200 and a 50-per-cent share in increased profits.

Peter Ware, team manager of world champion Lotus, said auto builders could no longer subsidize racing. He also said Lotus was the only team to make a profit in 1972.

Roughies Build Coaching Staff

REGINA (CP) — Saskatchewan Roughriders have announced the signing of two assistant coaches from the United States — Don Powell and Bud Riley.

They suceed John Payne, who has been appointed head coach of the Western Football Conference team, and Al Evans, who resigned.

Switch in Plate Date

TORONTO (CP) — The richest of all the Queen's Plates will be run in 1973 on June 30, the fourth Saturday in the month, to coincide with the visit to Toronto of Queen Elizabeth.

The race, which is traditionally run on the third Saturday in June and is the oldest uninterrupted stakes race in North America, will carry a gross value of approximately $115,000. The previous record was $88,000 in 1970.

The increase in money comes from the Jockey Club which is putting up $75,000-$25,000 more than its previous commitment and with expected nomination payments of $40,000 a record purse is almost assured.

RED-LIGHT RUNNER ASKS JURY TRIAL

SOUTHERN LAKE TAHOE, Calif. (AP) — A former Olympic marathon runner, ticketed for running a red light on foot, has pleaded not guilty and has asked for a jury trial.

Trial date for Klou Jalayer of Iran, working as a bellhop in a Lake Tahoe casino, was set for Jan. 26.

He faces a $5 fine if found guilty.

GRUEN JOINS WINGS

DETROIT (AP) — Detroit Red Wings of the National Hockey League have called up winger Danny Gruen from their Fort Worth farm club.

EARL YEOMANS DIES

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Dr. Earl Yeomans, who in his 25 years as athletic director built Temple University into a major college sports force in the East, died Friday at his home here. He was 77.

Wonderful World of Animals

By DR. F. MILLER

DEAR DR. MILLER: Our problem? Well, it's our triggerfish, Zoro. He's big, gorgeous, and apparently healthy. But he is driving us nuts. Here we spent several hundred dollars, a smalll fortune actually, setting up this big, beautiful salt-water tank for him and spent months and a few fish getting the tank properly adjusted before we even put him in it. We've had him three months now and what does he do? He swims continually from one end of the tank to the other in a straight line, bumps the glass on one end with his nose, goes back and bumps the glass on the other end with his nose. Back and forth, back and-forth, pacing like a lion in a cage only more so. Can we do anything to shake him out of his watery rut?—T.Y.

DEAR T.Y.: Zoro's "pacing" could indicate he is beyond help, psychologically speaking, though I can see why you would want to try for the sake of all concerned. Undoubtedly, Zoro has been bored to death with his miniaturized marine quarters and, ideally, the more safe and agreeable distractions you can provide for him, the better.

There are many methods of trying to coax Zoro out of his watery rut. You can plant some (artificial) greenery to force him to divert a bit. You can try to attract him to new areas of the tank by feeding him in other areas. You can put in an air stone — providing a stream of bubbles. These frequently attract fish. In combination with these efforts you can perhaps provide the ultimate diversion, another triggerfish. There is no guarantee they would be compatible. But, at least, this kind of diversion would be hard for Zoro to ignore.

Hanoi Claims U.S. Broke Bombing Pact

Times News Services

HANOI — U.S. planes have again bombed north of the 20th parallel, despite President Nixon's statement Dec. 30 that the bombing would be curtailed for the peace talks, a North Vietnamese spokesman said today.

A member of the Hanoi foreign ministry said U.S. planes bombed Dong Lai Parish, Friday, about 30 miles north of Nixon's 20th parallel cut-off point and 30 miles southwest of Hanoi.

The U.S. Command, however, denied the bombing raid, but some U.S. spokesmen said aerial reconnaissance flights were continuing over the Hanoi area.

It was as a result of Nixon's decision to curtail the bombing that Le Duc Tho left Hanoi Wednesday for Paris where he is due to meet Henry Kissinger on Monday.

Meanwhile, in Washington it was reported that Vietnam war costs, including 12 days of heavy bombing in December, have risen from $1 billion to $2 billion above previous estimates.

The 12-day bombing campaign alone added about $500 million to the cost of the war.

Both the Pentagon and the White House are now concerned with finding a way to pay for these added costs.

Last July, after the North Vietnamese offensive into South Vietnam, the Defence Department raised its estimate of the full cost of the war in fiscal 1973 by $1.1 billion to a total of $7.1 billion. That estimate, however, only ran through Sept. 30. Authoritative defence officials now say operations since then including the December bombing raids — have added from $1 billion to $2 billion in new costs.

In addition to money problem, there was discussion of information problems at the Pentagon Friday.

Defence Secretary Melvin Laird tightened the lid on details of the massive bombing raids last month, claiming that release of such information could upset the Paris peace talks.

"No information will be put out of this building at any time that would possibly jeopardize the success of those negotiations," Laird said. He said that he had ordered his chief spokesmen to "bear that in mind as they disseminate information during the next week or 10 days."

The South Vietnamese command, meanwhile, reported intensified North Vietnamese and Viet Cong attacks in South Vietnam, many of them aimed at villages and towns. At least three civilians were killed and 15 wounded in the latest attacks, it said.

NOT HER DAY

Sometimes it seems the whole world's out to get you and Mary Ellen Woods can be forgiven for feeling that way Friday.

Her car was hit — three times — by other cars as she drove to work.

Shortly before 8 in the morning she was stopped in a line of traffic on Carey Road when a car turned off Douglas and skidded into hers.

The other driver was apologetic. There was no damage so he drove off.

A moment later when she had advanced a little in the line-up another car swung around the corner and again slid into hers.

That driver felt badly too. There was no damage to speak of so he went on his way.

The 19-year-old clerk with a provincial government agency was feeling a bit shaken by developments so she pulled her near-new car to the curb on Douglas near Hillside, intending to walk to work.

This time a passing car skidded into her front fender causing an estimated $350 damage. It didn't stop.

"I closed my eyes and said, oh no," she recalled. All she remembers of the hit-and-run car is that it is green.

Her insurance agent has told her that the other driver needs to be found so a claim can be launched through his insurance company. While a claim can be made through her insurance, it will force the premium rate up.

City police are investigating.

Family of 16 Loses All

A family of 16, including 11 children, which was scheduled to move today lost all their belongings when an early morning fire destroyed the house they were leaving.

While all the occupants escaped from the older rented home at 3153 Gamma without injury, two city firemen were hurt fighting the blaze.

Fireman George Robertson slipped on ice and injured his shoulder. And Lieut. Cliff Robbins was struck by a falling timber.

"If he hadn't been wearing his helmet he would have been dead," assistant fire chief John Stewart said today.

One of the tenants, Johnny John, said he was awakened about midnight by his sister, Mrs. Greda Thomas. The family escaped through the back of the house as flames roared through the living room and engulfed the whole building.

Firemen, who answered the alarm at 12:06 a.m., estimated loss at about $9,000. Only the shell of the house remained.

In addition there were a married son, Norman, 19, and his 16-year-old wife, Vicki; Mrs. Thomas's sister Lorraine, 23, and her children, Anson, 6; Chris, 4, and three-month old Rosemary, a brother, Johnny John, 38, and his 11-year-old son Peter.

Jim Nelson, director of Victoria Rental Aid Service, said today the family was left with just the clothes they are wearing. They lost groceries, all bedding and furniture besides the rest of their clothes.

Donations could be taken directly to 740 Audley, he said.

Tories Slap 'Sweetheart' Tag on NDP

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Opening day ritual out of the way, opposition members of Parliament quickly resumed their customary roles of sniping at the Liberal government and at each other Friday.

The Progressive Conservatives and the New Democratic Party fired their main salvoes at the government and then exchanged a few shots between themselves.

The New Democrats, committed for the present to supporting the minority Liberals were called "sweethearts" and "bedfellows" of the government by jeering Tories.

Stanfield tried without success to get from Prime Minister Trudeau a list of bills the government will present to carry out Thursday's throne speech promises.

Outside the House he said the lack of such a list indicates the government "apparently is not very clear on its priorities."

He also sought the presentation dates of Finance Minister Turner's budget and of the tax bills left over from the last Parliament.

Trudeau said government House Leader Allan MacEachen will indicate the nature of some bills next week. Mr. Turner would announce the date of the budget soon.

The Conservative leader also tried in vain to get Turner to say whether the government will revoke a three-per-cent increase in personal income tax scheduled to start Jan. 1.

The finance minister did admit, on questioning by Lewis, that he had discussed with Revenue Minister Robert Stanbury a decision not to increase tax deductions from employee payrolls Jan. 1 until the matter is reviewed.

Stanfield told reporters Lewis was "easily satisfied" when he and the NDP agreed not to vote non-confidence in the government at present.

A Conservative motion of non-confidence will be presented next week. Stanfield said "it will deserve the support of the House" but gave no details.

The Liberals hold only 109 seats, Social Credit 15 and there are two independents.

In one opening shot Friday, freshman member Petter Reilly (PC—Ottawa West) accused the government of holding Parliament in contempt by releasing the text of the throne speech to reporters in advance of its delivery Thursday afternoon.

Reilly, a political columnist and former broadcaster, demanded an apology and an explanation from the prime minister.

Trudeau said the policy of providing the press with copies of government documents for handling in advance has been in force for at least 20 years.

CANCER CAME IN NEW HEART

Washington Post

WASHINGTON — For the first time in the history of heart transplants, a recipient has died of a cancer apparently introduced in his body by the heart he received.

The case was disclosed by the St. Louis University medical centre Friday. An official of the American College of Surgeons called it "unique." No previous heart recipient has succumbed to cancer received from his donor, though it has happened in several cases of kidney transplants.

Vincent Dobelman, 45, was given a new heart at the St. Louis centre Feb. 8. It came from a man who died of a brain tumor but not, so far as the surgeons knew then, from a cancer.

The operation was this centre's first heart transplant. Such transplants had already proved so chancy and donors so difficult to get, that surgeons at most centres had stopped doing them for the present.

Dr. Norman Shumway at Stanford is still doing almost one a month. Shumway and many other surgeons argue that transplants are still worth trying, on a careful basis, in patients who could not live by other means.

QUINTS FAIR IN ILLINOIS

EVANSTON, Ill. (AP) — Quintuplets born Friday night to a young couple were in fair condition early today in hospital here. The mother, Lynn Baer, 26, of nearby Northbrook, gave birth to three girls and two boys, the couple's first children. Dr. William Gardner, who is supervising care of the infants said Friday night the babies' lung functions were reasonably good and their breathing more rapid than normal.

Thalidomide Firm Offers $47 Million

LONDON (AP) — The parents of Britain's crippled thalidomide children warily welcomed today an offer of about $47 million in compensation from the giant British drug and liquor company that marketed the tranquillizer that brought agony.

The Distillers Co. proposed Friday night to pay about $4.7 million a year for the next decade into a "charitable fund" for the deformed children.

That was exactly the amount the parents had demanded. But one niggling doubt remained: How will the money be shared out?

London art dealer David Mason, leader of the parents' pressure group who now is in the United States mobilizing support for a planned boycott there of Distillers products, said:

"It's a much more realistic offer, but I'm worried about accepting any deal that involves a charitable trust. It is not acceptable if it involves a means test."

A "means test" would involve assessing the parents' finances to determine how much should be awarded to their children.

Parents insisted when they rejected Distillers' two previous offers that their children should be given money on the basis of their deformities rather than the size of their parents' bank accounts.

However, there was hope the deal, four times more than Distillers' previous offer, would be accepted by the parents and end the years of agony.

The chief charity commissioner, Thomas Green, commented: "The deeds of a charity trust need not necessarily involve a means test. In this case, I don't anticipate any difficulties."

But as the parents considered the deal, Distillers said bluntly it was the company's "final offer". The company has always denied negligence or legal liability.

Distillers said that it would set up the trust as soon as the majority of parents accepted the offer.

The company also promised an immediate payment of about $11,750 to each family, including the parents of thalidomide victims who accepted smaller settlements in 1968 before the big thalidomide crusade got going.

'Uncertain Future' Seen in B.C.

VANCOUVER (CP) — William Hamilton, chairman of the Employers' Council of British Columbia, expressed concern in a statement prepared for release today about the province's economic future under the recently-elected New Democratic Party government and warned that proposed increases in corporation income taxes would weaken productivity and ultimately depress living standards in B.C.

"We face an uncertain future in British Columbia. For the first time in North American history, a prosperous, industrialized, resource-oriented province is firmly within the control of a socialist government," Hamilton said in a speech prepared for the annual convocation ceremony of the B.C. Institute of Chartered Accountants.

"There is a wide variety of opinion within the business community concerning what this will mean to the broad economic future of the province. Perhaps, as some like to believe, a resource-rich province such as British Columbia can afford a taste of socialism better than most places," he said.

But "every time you pile more taxes on a company, you reduce the capacity of that company to market its products, to enlarge its plant, to increase and broaden its production, to employ more people, to pay higher wages."

Business and industry are constantly being chided to accept greater social and environmental responsibilities, and are increasingly doing so, Hamilton told the 75 graduating accountants.

"But government must also recognize and acknowledge, however reluctantly, that it has financial as well as social and environmental responsibilities."

He suggested that Premier Dave Barrett commission a study of financial priorities and realities and recommended the establishment of an economic council of B.C.

"Taxes above a certain equitable level can burden and even bankrupt a whole economy, not just financially, but also in the sense that they stifle and eventually kill entrepreneurial enterprise."

Hamilton said the NDP's pre-election proposal to raise the current 10 per cent corporate income tax, collected under the federal-provincial collection agreement, "would have obvious deleterious effects on the competitiveness of our industries."

"At the moment, I doubt that our business community and the government are going to see eye-to-eye on taxation policy. While the government will be viewing it from the standpoints of idealism and 'anti-corporate bumishness,' business will be arguing from the hard school of experience and bottom line on the balance sheet.

"And both at times will be arguing without adequate facts, because until now we have had no provincial vehicle similar to the economic activity and more long-term benefits for our people, our society and our economy that if the same million is spent by a government."

"I submit that provincial taxation policy can make or break the whole economic picture because, more than in almost any other province, our economy is one of harvesting and processing raw materials such as forest products, which must then be sold on the markets of the world in competition with all other areas.

"It is a fact of life that many of our mines exist, operate and generate considerable employment only because the existing tax policy has made it economic to mine low-grade ore ore which would not be economic to mine if taxes were heavier."

Planning Power Development Key

By PAUL MOSS
Times Staff

If Victoria is looking for an example of an advisory planning commission which provides ample community input, conducts its business out in the open and makes a positive contribution to the planning process it need go no further than Richmond, B.C.

Generally recognized as one of the most effective planning commissions in the province, the Richmond APC was anything but that up to 1961.

As William Kerr, the municipality's director of planning, recalled: "It was pretty well redundant because it was just rubber-stamping everything we did."

Then came the shake-up. The membership was expanded from nine to 25, most of them still appointed by the council on the at-large basis, but with nominations invited from ratepayers' and senior citizens' groups as well as the Chamber of Commerce.

At the same time the traditional, time-consuming chore of studying individual rezoning applications was removed, and the commission entrusted with "broad, long-range planning." Five sub-committees with specialized fields of interest were set up.

Kerr said the commission's members are not regarded as "speaking for" their various groups. But they do report back to the organizations on those APC matters which can be made public, so that there is a constant percolation of information to the public. All full meetings of the commission are open to the press.

"There is quite a bit of feed-back," Kerr admitted.

Thus the APC in Richmond fulfils what many believe to be the ideal role of planning commissions: representing the citizen's point of view to the planner and council in the plan preparation process, and then taking the message back to the community groups they represent.

"This public information aspect may be the best reason for the existence of an advisory planning commission today in the planning process," says a report prepared by a New Westminster municipal planning service.

Could a commission structured on those lines work in Victoria, or would it even be desirable? Some would say 25 is too unwieldy a number—Victoria's commission, including ex officio members, totals 18 — but no doubt there could be wider representation than now exists.

Terry Farmer, president of the Victoria Chamber of Commerce which is showing an increasingly vigorous interest in the city's growth and future, said the chamber would "jump at the chance" of having a voice on the APC.

"We could always find some very well qualified persons for that job," he said, "We have people who are very interested in the community but who don't want to become involved in politics."

One of the interesting points of study on the city hall scene in the year ahead will be to see how much, if at all, Victoria's newest and youngest alderman succeeds in producing his own shake-up of the planning machinery, including the APC.

Sam Bawlf was, after all, elected on a platform which contained the pledge that he would work for the establishment of "A planning dialogue between city hall and neighborhoods through council-appointed citizens' committees."

Certainly, as an experienced planning consultant, 28-year-old Bawlf could become a valuable "deputy" to the chairman of council's planning committee, Ald. Mike Young.

But Young doesn't see eye to eye with Bawlf on the potential value of local area planning commissions, which the latter first proposed some months ago as chairman of the James Bay Community Association.

Bawlf envisages eight such commissions, representing the various districts such as James Bay, Victoria West and Fairfield, working in co-operation with the APC.

The APC would continue to advise council regarding the over-all impact of planning matters on the whole community, while the area commissions would represent the concern of citizens in areas directly affected by specific proposals.

Young has no quarrel with the theory, but says in practice council will just be creating another arm on the octopus of bureaucracy.

"To get a community response we must deliver the goods to the community," he says.

Joseph Cunliffe, the commission chairman, feels much the same way. The vehicle for citizen involvement in planning already exists, in the form of the Community Planning Association of Canada, he claims.

In almost any conversation on the problem of planning Victoria's growth in an orderly, sensible manner, one argument is certain to crop up again and again: the importance of formulating — and then adhering to — a master-plan to guide the processes of growth.

There have been two such plans drawn up, the Capital Region Plan of 1959 and the Over-all Plan for Victoria of 1965, but the city has done no more than accept these as general guides to development.

Nor is there, now, any immediately declared intention to develop a general plan, although there are many individual studies and proposals funnelling through city hall which could form the basis for community plans that could, in turn, become part of an over-all plan for Victoria.

The Spence-Sales report on the future of the downtown area, the James Bay study, the Victoria West report, the Waterfront document — these and others surfaced during 1972 and make up a useful framework for future plan shaping.

In the drafting of such a plan, the APC would have a vital part to play.

Certainly, if the year just ended has proved one thing, with its rash of shocks, revelations, accusations and squabbles, it is that the city must stop adopting a defensive posture and take a much more aggressive approach to planning.

As Mayor Pollen and others have pointed out, the city's zoning bylaws have proved ineffective weapons, unable to ward off determined developers and prevent undesirable "monstrosities" of development.

Pollen's suggested solution to this situation is to have council move ahead as quickly as possible with the task of designating firm community plans for areas such as James Bay and Victoria West, then registering these plans with the provincial government so that they become inflexibly "locked in."

If that is to be tackled in 1973 it means that the APC, as the voice of citizen opinion, and the sounding board for council's and the planning department's ideas, will probably be busier than it ever has been.

Hard, tedious work. But, if it produces the desired result, Victoria's future could be the better for it.

Base To Hire 400

CFB Esquimalt will shortly be hiring about 400 additional men to carry out work made possible by a $1,042,000 allocation under the federal government's labor-intensive program.

The allocation is about half of B.C.'s share of the $13.3 million project which is designed to provide employment until the end of May. B.C.'s share is $2,121,000.

The bulk of the money earmarked for the Esquimalt area will be used on maintenance projects, including the improvement, drainage and interior painting of public married quarters, bush clearance at Nanaimo and Rocky Point and interior renovations to the operations building in the dockyard.

Plans for these projects are completed and the hiring of personnel is expected to start soon.

An armed forces' spokesman said Friday the allocation is "slightly larger than last year's when in the neighborhood of 400 men were taken on."

Other bases in B.C. allotted funds for this purpose include Comox, Chilliwack, Baldy Hughes, Holberg, Masset and Kamloops.

The $13.3 million is part of a total $60 million approved by the treasury board to create employment within departmental programs.

Program Eases Path Into 'Straight' World

By SUSAN RUTTAN
Times Staff

A group of William Head Institution inmates have been getting periodic glimpses of the outside world lately, thanks to eight local volunteers.

The program, called Link-up, is an attempt to bridge the wide gap between the inmate and ex-con on one side, and the business community on the other.

It was started last fall, the brainchild of Michael Bennett, executive director of the John Howard Society of Vancouver Island, the after-care agency for male inmates.

Bennett found a willing partner in Cleve Tuttle, presonnel manager of Eaton's Tuttle, who has done volunteer work with parolees for several years, recruited his business friends for the program.

Inmate and volunteer normally meet about once every six weeks, whenever the inmate gets a day's temporary absence.

The volunteer picks him up at the prison, meets him for lunch and possibly for a coffee after work, and drives him back in the evening. The two keep contact during the rest of the day by telephone.

If the inmate doesn't call in when he should, the volunteer telephones the prison authorities and then take over. This has only happened once to Tuttle, and he knew where the inmate was heading — to his favorite pub.

"Once we're friends with these people, they don't like to disappoint us," Tuttle said. "They're just guys, just people, with certain difficulties in certain areas."

Tuttle said the inmates are shy at first, uncomfortable at being on the outisde. They feel everyone who sees them knows they're from the prison.

"I've had fellows come out who ask never to come out again," he said.

Although he's a personnel manager himself, Tuttle admits that the business community often excludes the ex-con, refusing to give him a job.

"As they get closer to their release we do our very best to help them find work," he said.

This, of course, was Bennett's whole purpose in getting people from the business community into the program. He hopes they will soften the stand against men who have done time.

His hope is that real friendships cant ake root from these periodic meetings between executive and inmate.

Bottle Re-Use Pressed

Nate Bello of the Regional Recycling Depot, 4026 Borden, said Friday, "Ninety-five per cent of all bottles could be re-used. This includes everything from ketchup bottles and mustard jars to liquor bottles.

"In 1972 we shipped over 100 tons of glass — and that's just from people bringing it in to the depot. We're open four days a week."

Bello has already approached the Liquor Control Board to discuss the feasibility of the board using returnable bottles for its own brands of liquor.

He said that in 1971 the board used 1,466,628 25-ounce bottles and 709,296 12-ounce bottles — all non-returnable.

"We've been saving all the liquor cases for the past month. We're taking them and stockpiling them in the hopes that the board will eventually take them back," said Bello.

LCB chairman William Bruce said, "Any liquor company is reluctant to use them again."

He said the board has no plans for using returnable bottles.

Into Our Winter, a Patchwork Tomcat

WHEN WE LAST crossed our favorite trout stream it was galloping under its highway bridge in a crested yellow freshet. The alders were bare, the evergreens swayed to the assault of a wet southeaster, and the inland mountains were blanketed with cloud.

These winter days it is hard to believe that summer ever was, or that in a matter of months we will look out from our windows at American tourists digging for clams in the wrong places.

They also demonstrate through their own vigorious life-style that winter is a season to be used and enjoyed. They visit, and the fact that friends or relatives may live miles distant along the highway that serves a strung-out community makes no never-mind.

They attend night school classes, or go steelhead fishing when the water's right, or tackle the home improvement jobs for which summer never yields enough time. Campbell River Concert Association brings quality entertainment to town and draws full houses: we've had Victoria Symphony Orchestra and the Canadian Opera Company, and look forward to Spanish ballet with flamenco guitars.

Add these and other spare-time pursuits to the exigencies of making a living, and we find that the days aren't long enough. Summer's fine and we'll welcome it back — but there's something to be said for a jaunt in the weeping woods and a hot buttered rum at the end of it.

This is do-it-yourself country. Some jobs I won't touch, and others I approach warily. For any electrical monkeying beyond changing a light switch, I call in a calm electrician. ("If my helper screams," says he as he trips a circuit breaker, "that wire he's holding is a live one.")

But with power tools to help and inspiration provided by a friend who is building his house chapter by chapter from instruction books, I now tackle minor jobs around the place with confidence.

Small stuff like shoe boards for clothes closets and rods or hooks to hang things on no longer dismay me. The knife rack my dear one asked for was made and installed in the same evening, to my surprise and hers no less.

When a lazy susan carried indolence to the final extreme, I yanked it from its cupboard and installed shelves. They fitted. On the strength of that performance, Win has asked for a kitchen cabinet guaranteed not to wobble and with no plastic wood in its joints.

Winter has brought other diversions.

We gave each other snowshoes for Christmas and look forward to floundering along snow-choked trails on them before spring.

Into our lives has come what we insisted would never again claim our affections — a pet in the person of a little tomcat with patchwork coat of black and white.

Two girls from up the road brought Patches to our door on an icy night. He was about three months old. His people had abandoned him when they moved on, and until the girls coaxed him down from a tree with a saucer of milk, he had been clinging to life as best he could.

They couldn't keep him — they had cats of their own — and he would go to the pound if nobody took him in.

Sorry, I said, we didn't want another cat. Too bad, Win said, but if we adopted him the highway that had claimed our tough black Cleo would probably kill him as well.

Minutes later, he was rubbing against our ankles with loud and rusty purr while we made a start on filling out his skin-and-bones frame.

We have been reminded when the great gales come walloping in that the sea is enemy as well as friend. It's easier now for us to read behind the Mona Lisa smiles that fishing camp operators and other shore-dwellers sometimes wear when the August guest remarks on the picturesque quality of the beaches. We know how those beached acquired that look.

Half a year on this strip of unorganized territory we now call home isn't enough to justify flat pronouncements on the merits and drawbacks of country living.

Still, reviewing those months, I find that they've gone better than average well. We enjoy today and look forward to tomorrow, and what reasonable couple can ask for better than that?
